

Poem on the Bathroom Wall #3

Captain Chaos speaks to his children in Images

He went on the road today
Left his skin behind Went to pieces, transformed into another void and left the puzzle unplayed.

When he emerged again,
It was in colour
He spoke to his flowers in Kaleidoscopes and dissolved their minds in rainbows.

Captain Chaos left town today, Immaculate and apathetic
All his children sighed in their new wastelands foraging madly through ashes for the pieces.

He is the puzzle ring and his language annihilates all the patterns

There is no solving him Something has broken him There is no putting him back together

Captain Chaos closes the book on his memory
Burns every second of the past His fingers turn the planets into nothing Beware of when he speaks with his hands.

Sad Jane

Concealed

I heard a faint stirring from you like quiet small things rustling inside a mound of leaves my unfeeling words were fingers of cool air that danced and teased and stirred whatever was beneath and then it scurried but dared not show I saw the sheltered eyes of it upturned at me through the slivers of darkness and from there it watched me two small eyes, horribly afraid I hear its small whisper-breaths it sensed that I am stronger it remains, afraid its motions frozen buried in the layers that churn and turn in the weather from past summers when you were full of color and life

It hides under the fragile cover of weathered-out leaves a cover of fragile leaves each curving vein the inscription of a woman's name now faded they all crumble to the touch and your heart trembles violently but I know there is life in you I hear its whisper-breaths afraid to show so I wait and sit while on me the two small eyes are still intently fixed from within the blanket of leaves inside the little pocket that rises and falls with its fits of If I wait here long enough perhaps it will emerge if I wait through the night,

by Sherry L. Morin

distractions

Star Hanger

You stand as a tower next to me yet I am unable to touch you and you are unable to know me

You reach up to the sky perhaps or maybe you dig down below yet, only in appearance, you've earned respect

Your hands are long, fingers holding my threads and such a long figure wraps me up I cannot fathom any of the explanations

I close my eyes for the moment and pray that they will be opened to a star hanger and if not then I must lament when they open

You stand as a tower next to me and I wonder what is within and why I have seen you but obscurely

You reach up above my head and hang a star and I have not been able to see why I wonder and write asking who you are are you of a man possessed? are you of a spirit possessed?

why have you done this to me?
can't you see that I bleed?

Star Hanger, I cannot deny Star Hanger, you have caught my eye Star Hanger, what is your name Star Hanger, I do not understand Star Hanger, are you more than a woman?

Star Hanger

by Jason Richard

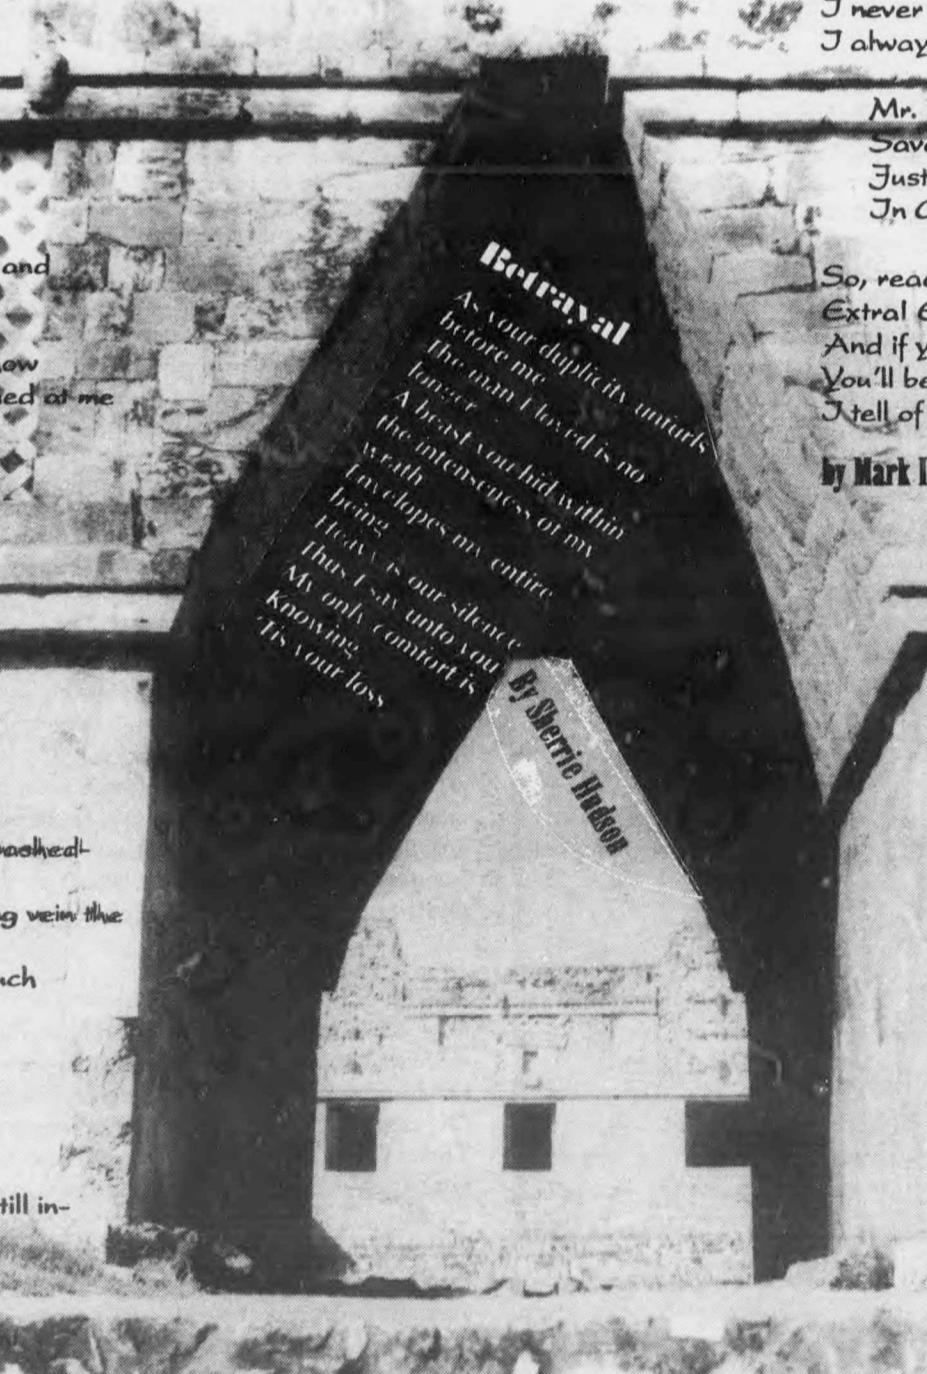

photo by Pete DuChemin

Tale of a Newspaper Girl

Extra! Extra! Read all about it!

Hear the story of the exploded man from Thames!
Hear of a calm, familial man Who this very town knows as Mr. Boniface.
How he this morning a terrible deed did commit.

It is said that Mr. Boniface did this day did explode In the rectory of nearby St. Joan's.
He did explode like a heathen, it is said!
And all his body was consumed by little devils Who sprang from every facet of Mr. Boniface Unto the rectory floor in flight!
Running, screaming, scampering everywhere Creating hell and great despair!

Oh read about it!

Read of how the known men of our town were shamed
By this strange come-uppance of Mr. Boniface.
For I do recall one elder say:
Tis my social disgrace to witness an upright man explode.

Tis true, the rector himself stood nearby.
Many in front said he did cry, Placing his head in his hands and levelling lament Unto God, whom he did blame for this demise.
For how could he have known A calm manner of man like Mr. Boniface?
A single man of no pride or repute Laid every night in other person's beds Lavishing praises on their wives.
How was he to know Boniface was a man of heavy stress?
Working long, overdrawn, devious nights
To satisfy all earthly women's delights?
And who was he to know That stress was of a demon kind?
Oh God, the rector cried!

You know, I never before heard the rector cry
And have his will by God denied.
I never knew of Mr. Boniface's awful pride.
I always thought, as did the Church,

Mr. Boniface was just another soul Saved from guilt and pride!
Just another neophyte,
In God's great suburban divide.

So, read it! Read it!
Extra! Extra! Read all about it!
And if you like this story You'll be taken by a fit when I tell of the hypocrite Doctor of Derby!

by Mark Ireland

My Love is a Bowl of Cereal (No Skippy: I wrote this just for you...)

My love is a bowl of cereal He's all mushy sitting in milk.
When I eat up my cereal,
He goes down as smoothly as silk.

When I don't want an Oreo
I reach for a Chester And crunch 'till it's inside my tummy.
When I crave for some Bran Flakes
I throw out my pancakes
And feast 'till my movements go wonky.
(Oh, how sweet).

Oh lovely Shreddie
Oh Shreddie, my love What a beautiful Shreddie you are.

After this you will think I'm a Cornflake
As you probably already do.
So the next time you're eating cereal Just remember: I love you.

By Kathleen R. Grady