

An Appreiation

REV. F. H. WALLACE, M.A., D.D.

It is often said that the old-time style of religious living is obsolete. But in our dear departed friend, Mrs. Cox, we see one who realized most thoroughly the ancient ideal of life and godliness—"to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with one's God." She exemplified the New Testament ideal by going about doing good; and she carried through her whole life the precious ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Under the fierce light which beats upon a person in her position, she displayed no qualities inconsistent with utter purity and simplicity of character. She lived one of the most beautiful and useful lives ever lived in this land.

Her ability was not of the kind which dazzles the public, but consisted of such tact, insight, and
