MAMMON.

By the Rev. John Harris, author of "The Great Teacher," &c. Royal 12mo. pp. viii. 341. London, 1836.

In the latter part of the year 1835, John Tilden Compton, a student of the University of Cambridge, proposed to a friend a prize of one hundred guineas for the author of the best Essay upon the sin of Covetousness. The Hon. and Rev. Report No. 1, and the Rev. Dr. Riggs, who were appointed judges, were so much impressed with the merits of the Essay, that they presented the prize to Mr. Harris. The prize was awarded to Mr. Harris, and he was honored with the title of "Mammon," a dissertation upon the sin of Covetousness, as a dissertation upon the sin of Covetousness, as a dissertation upon the sin of Covetousness.

Never have we sat down to read a work of any length, with more interest and of a more striking and powerful character than we have done to the one now before us. It is a work of great power and interest, and it is a work of great power and interest.
