The Man Who
Covets England.

This country was recently visited by a young man named Hugo Stinnes, in connection with a "cigarette" scheme for obtaining control of the waste products of the tobacco industry. The waste products would then be utilized in making chemicals.

He does not realize that the visit is a grave danger to this country, and one knows that Hugo Stinnes is the father of this young man. At the back of the movement.

In order to give readers some idea of the personality of Hugo Stinnes, we publish the following article by Mr. J. "Stinnes," who was for eight months at Stinnes' advisers and confidential business men.

It will give you a good idea of the personality of this German's enterprise, his desire to control England, and his amazing efforts to restore the Hohenzollerns to power.

Recent events in Europe, and, indeed, in the whole world, have proved the truth of those words. With regard to Germany, they appear strangely significant inasmuch as the most important personage in it after the war, and after the revolution which was its sequel, is a man who was hardly known outside his own country ten years ago.

Yet this man, Hugo Stinnes, now runs the country and the new National People's party, as well as an unlimited number of financial enterprises, and is the sole owner or principal shareholder of sixty different newspapers in Germany and other countries.

In that sense, Hugo Stinnes is a kind of monstrosity. He would not reveal before anything, and he would not dilute at anything if, by the sacrifice of all that man holds dear in the realm of conscience and self-respect, he could avenge himself, as well as his country, for the just punishment meted out by the Treaty of Versailles.

Master of the Secret Service. He has mastered perfectly the technique of the war which looms in the future and tragic out of all the misery and horror of the last years—the knowledge that with money one can obtain many things and do many things.

And of money he has more than he needs—more than he knows—and his hidden millions have allowed him to get all the old weapons of the German government, in this way of secret-service, espionage, and guile, and to use them with far more skill than the Kaiser and his servants ever employed.

Today in Germany nothing is done the way of a political, financial or industrial enterprise without Stinnes. He made aware of it, and either controlling or directing it in some way. He is the whole of Germany in himself, and what is worse, he is quite aware of this terrible fact.

No Interest Outside Business. He is building now in Sweden, where his erected immense wharves without outside help, a mercantile fleet which will be twice the size of the present fleet of the Hamburg-American line, and which will be entirely outside the control of the Allies.

Stinnes is about fifty years old, medium-sized, heavily-built, with a broad, dark beard, very dark, with a dark complexion and cast of feature; short-cropped hair, heavy vulgar and craggy hands with stout fingers, thick bushy eyebrows and a penetrating, keen glance. He is quiet in manner until any one tries to differ with him, when he fires and becomes almost insolent in his way of asserting his opinions. He does not brook contradiction.

Stinnes' education was essentially a practical and commercial one. He speaks English, but no other foreign language; has absolutely no interest in art or literature, and no love for music. The only things he cares for are economic problems, and he has a rough contempt for people who allow themselves to become absorbed by anything outside such questions.

He lives very simply, dresses almost like a beggar, in which his eldest son contrasts him. He wears the same suit, winter and summer, stout country hobnail boots, a small black hat, which is invariably the same, and has probably no evening clothes—at least, no one remembers having seen him wear reason to suspect that he knew it quite well. This congenial couple have seven children. The eldest, who, in business, is well known in private life, goes by the simple appellation of "Junior," must be about five-and-twenty, and is already married to a girl of about the same type of his mother. He is just as hard regarding business as his father, whom he seeks to outdo in business.

"Junior" speaks English very well, but despises French, and holds in complete disdain any kind of amusement outside the contemplation of his bank account. There is no fear that, under his rule, the wealth and importance of the firm of Hugo Stinnes will diminish. One of Stinnes' aims is to seize the immense granary called Russia. But here again we find another sample of the astuteness of his elastic mind, because, far from showing himself hostile to British policy, he would like, on the contrary, to draw nearer to England, which he secretly hopes to transfer into another of his victims, scheming to re-establish Germany.

He has vast interests in England, some of which he likes to speak of, and others about which no one knows anything, except a very few of his most trusted and confidential agents. All through the war he managed, in spite of the strict watch kept by the authorities and intelligence department, to have representatives in London and other large English cities, and now has a general manager of all his business in England.

The idea which is behind these schemes of Stinnes is to re-establish the Hohenzollern dynasty on its lost throne is his secret ambition to become the Chancellor of the restored empire. Otherwise we shall never see him relax his activity or his efforts to bring once more to life this mighty Germany, which, according to the words of Bismarck, his model, was created "with blood and with iron." He is one of those obstinate Teutons who will never admit that they have been beaten, and who imagine that their present plight is but a pause in their future development, no longer as a military, but as a commercial and an industrial nation. Feeling secure, as he does, of the Russian market, and knowing that within a few years he will be the owner of a commercial fleet which will be on the way to outbid the naval power of England from the mercantile point of view, he can afford to wait for the development of events which he imagines himself to be the only man capable of controlling, owing to the unlimited amount of money at his disposal.

We are making every effort to keep our entire staff working throughout the coming winter. This can only be accomplished if the Smoker insists on buying the Tobaccos MADE in Newfoundland. Their Quality and price cannot be equalled—therefore, it's up to YOU to buy the local brands that will keep your own people working when they'll most need work.

Lectured on Poultry Culture.

The Newfoundland Poultry Association's lecture at Middle Eight School House, Kelligrews, was given last night. The lecturers left town by motor car and opened the meeting at 8.30. Messrs. A. J. Bayly, G. R. Williams and W. R. Butler comprised the deputation. They were received by the Rev. Hugh Facey, Rector of Kelligrews and Rev. A. Pittman, Rector of Topsail and an enthusiastic audience. Rev. Hugh Facey introduced the speakers and gave them a formal welcome. The first speaker was Mr. A. J. Bayly, who took for his subject "Poultry Propaganda" and the "Housing of Birds." Mr. Bayly spoke well and distributed a large number of leaflets containing valuable information on Poultry questions, issued by the Newfoundland Poultry Association. He also left with the schoolmaster, Mr. Jones, a plan of a model poultry house. Mr. G. R. Williams followed him and took for his subject "General Poultry Topics" covering the ground as fully as possible in the time allotted to him. Mr. W. R. Butler spoke on the subject of "Pure Bred Poultry" and illustrated his lecture by exhibiting a pure bred live Orpington bird and also brought a bird of mongrel type and compared the difference in size. He also spoke on the care of poultry generally and how poultry can be made to pay. It is hoped that when the next lecture will be given, the 60 lantern slides will be here so that the addresses can be illustrated with the aid of a lantern. The meeting closed at 10.30 with an expression of thanks from Rev. Mr. Facey who trusted that they would be privileged with another lecture later on in the season. Mr. A. J. Bayly offered two prizes for the best essay on "Poultry Culture" written by school children and the essays are to be sent in by the first of December. Mr. Harry Cowan of Topsail Road was also present and returned to his home with the visitors, who arrived in town shortly after midnight. The Newfoundland Poultry Association hopes to visit the remaining schools and give lectures on Poultry during the coming winter in the interests of the general farming public. The lecture was much appreciated by those present and they are anxious to hear the subject further discussed.
