A Prince of Sinners

BY PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.

Author of "A Lost Leader," "The Malefactor," "A Maker of History," Etc.

"That's right, Brooks," Mr. Bullsom declared. "Stick up for your pals."

Brooks looked a little annoyed.

"The only claim I have upon Lord Arranmore's acquaintance," he remarked, "is his kindness to my father, I hope, Dr. Seventon, that you are going to press the matter of that fever hospital home. I have a little information which I think you might make [illegible]."

[illegible] changed his place, wine-glass [illegible] and the conversation drifted [illegible]. But he found the position of [illegible] star one which the Bullsoms were determined to force upon him, for they had no sooner entered the drawing-room than Selina came rushing across the room to him and drew him confidentially on one side.

"Mr. Brooks," she said, "do go and talk to Mrs. Huntingdon. She is so anxious to hear about the Lady Caroom who is staying at Enton."

"I know nothing about Lady Caroom," Brooks replied, without any overplus of graciousness.

Selina looked at him in some dismay.

"But you met her at Enton, didn't you?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, I met her there," Brooks answered, impatiently. "But I certainly don't know enough of her to discuss her with Mrs. Huntingdon. I rather wanted to speak to your cousin."

Selina's thin little lips became compressed, and for a moment she forgot to smile. Her cousin indeed! Mary, who was sitting there in a plain black gown without a single ornament, and not even a flower, looking for all the world like the poor relation she was! Selina glanced downwards at the great bunch of roses and maidenhair fern in her bosom, at the fancy and beaded trimming which ran like a nightmare all over her new gown, and which she was absolutely certain had come from Paris; at the heavy gold bracelets which concealed some part of her thin arms; she remembered suddenly the aigrette in her hair, such a finish to her costume, and her self-confidence returned.

"Oh, don't bother about Mary now. Mrs. Huntingdon is dying to have you talk to her. Please do—and if you like—I will give you one of my roses for your button-hole."

Brooks stood the shock gallantly, and bowed his thanks. He had met Mrs. Huntingdon before, and they talked together for a quarter of an hour or so.

"I wish I knew why you were here," was almost her first question. "Isn't it all funny?"

"Mr. Bullsom has always been very decent to me," he answered. "It is through him I was appointed agent to Mr. Henslow."

"Oh, business! I see," she answered, shrugging her shoulders. "Same here. I'm a doctor's wife, you know. Did you ever see such awful girls! and who in the name of all that marvellous can be their dressmaker?"

"Bullsom is a very good sort indeed," Brooks answered. "I have a great respect for him."

She made a little face.

"Who's the nice-looking girl in black with her hair parted in the middle?" she asked.

"Mr. Bullsom's niece. She is quite charming, and most intelligent."

"Dear me!" Mrs. Huntingdon remarked. "I had no idea she had anything to do with the family. Sort of a Cinderella look about her now you mention it. Couldn't you get her to come over and talk to me? I'm horribly afraid of Mrs. Bullsom. She'll come out of that dress if she tries to talk, and I know I shall laugh."

"I'm sure I can," Brooks answered, rising with alacrity. "I'll bring her over in a minute."

Mary had just finished arranging a card-table when Brooks drew her on one side.

"About that subject!" he began.

"We shall scarcely have time to talk about it now, shall we?" she answered. "You will be wanted to play cards or something. We shall be quite content to leave it to you."

"I should like to talk it over with you," he said. "Do tell me when I may see you."

She sat down, and he stood by her chair.

"Really, I don't know," she answered. "Perhaps I shall be at home when you pay your duty call."

"Come and have some tea at Mellor's with me tomorrow."

She seemed not to hear him. She had caught Mrs. Seventon's eye across the room, and rose to her feet.

"You have left Mrs. Seventon alone all the evening," she said. "I must go and talk to her."

He stood before her—a little insistent.

"I shall expect you at half-past four," he said.

She shook her head.

"Oh, no. I have an engagement."

"The next day, then."

"Thank you! I would rather you did not ask me. I have a great deal to do just now. I will bring the girls to the lecture."

"Wednesday week," he protested, "is a long way off."

"You can go over to Enton," she laughed, "and get some more checks from your wonderful friend."

"I wonder," he remarked, 'why you dislike Lord Arranmore so much."

'Instinct perhaps—or caprice," she answered, lightly.

"The latter for choice," he answered. "I don't think that he is a man to dislike instinctively. He rather affected me the other way."

"It is foolish of me," she remarked. "You will think so, too, when I tell you that my only reason is because of a likeness."

"A likeness!" he repeated.

She nodded.

"He is exactly like a man who was once a friend of my father's, and who did him a great deal of harm. My father was much to blame, I know, but this man had a great influence over him, and a most unfortunate one. Now don't you think I'm absurd?"

"I think it is a little rough on Lord Arranmore," he answered, "don't you?"

"It would be if my likes or dislikes made the slightest difference to him," she answered. "As it is, I don't suppose it matters."

"Was this in England?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"No, it was abroad—in Montreal. I really must go to Mrs. Seventon. She looks terribly bored."

Brooks made no effort to detain her. He was looking intently at a certain spot in the carpet. The coincidence—it was nothing more, of course — was curious.

CHAPTER III.

Charity the "Crime."

There followed a busy time for Brooks, the result of which was a very marked improvement in his prospects. For the younger Morrison and his partner, loth to lose altogether the valuable Enton connection, offered Brooks a partnership in their firm. Mr. Ascough, who was Lord Arranmore's London solicitor, and had been Brooks' guardian, after careful consideration advised his acceptance, and there being nothing in the way, the arrangements were pushed through almost at once. Mr. Ascough, on the morning of his return to London, took the opportunity warmly to congratulate Brooks

"Lord Arranmore has been marvellously kind to me," Brooks agreed. "To tell you the truth, Mr. Ascough, I feel almost inclined to add incomprehensibly kind."

The older man stroked his grey mustache thoughtfully.

"Lord Arranmore is eccentric," he remarked. "Has always been eccentric, and will remain so, I suppose, to the end of the chapter. You are the one who profits, however, and I am very glad of it."

"Eccentricity," Brooks remarked, "is, of course, the only obvious explanation of his generosity so far as I am concerned to me, Mr. Ascough, to wonder whether the friendship or connection between him and my father was in any way a less slight thing than I have been led to suppose."

Mr. Ascough shrugged his shoulders.

"Lord Arranmore," he said, "has told you, no doubt, all that there is to be told."

Brooks sat at his desk, frowning slightly, and tapping the blotting-paper with a penholder.

"All that Lord Arranmore has told me," he said, "is that my father occupied a cabin not far from his on the banks of Lake Ono, that they saw little of each other, and that he only found out his illness by accident. That my father then disclosed his name, gave him his papers and your address. There was merely the casual intercourse between two Englishmen coming together in a strange country."

"That is what I have always understood," Mr. Ascough agreed. "Have you any reason to think otherwise?"

"No definite reason—except Lord Arranmore's unusual kindness to me," Brooks remarked. "Lord Arranmore is one of the most self-centred men I ever knew—and the least impulsive. Why, therefore, he should go out of his way to do me a kindness I cannot understand."

"If this is really an enigma to you," Mr. Ascough answered, "I cannot help you to solve it. Lord Arranmore has been the reverse of communicative to me. I am afraid you must fall back upon his lordship's eccentricity."

Mr. Ascough rose, but Brooks detained him.

"You have plenty of time for your train," he said. "Will you forgive me if I go over a little old ground with you—for the last time?"

The lawyer resumed his seat.

"I am in no hurry," he said, "if you think it worth while."

"My father came to you when he was living at Stepney—a stranger to you."

"A complete stranger," Mr. Ascough agreed. "I had never seen him before in my life. I did a little trifling GAL TWENTY-FOUR STORY ao tao business for him in connection with his property.

"He told you nothing of his family or relatives?"

"He told me that he had not a relation in the world."

"You knew him slightly, then?" Brooks continued, "all the time he was in London? And when he left for that voyage he came to you."

"Yes."

"He made over his small income then to my mother in trust for me. Did it strike you as strange that he should do this instead of making a will?"

REV. MR. GUNN SCORES THE PROPOSED CREED

Congregationalist Declares It Does Not Reflect the Full Spirit of Christ.

Toronto, June 14.—The debate on church union was resumed Saturday morning in the Western Congregational Church by Rev. W. T. Gunn, M. A., B. D., general secretary of the Congregational Union.

"I want it distinctly understood that I am not opposed to the principle of organic union," he said, "but I am not satisfied with the basis prepared by the committee upon church union. They have failed lamentably upon the matter of creed. I cannot fail to see that the committee's creed does not reflect the full spirit of Christ as it exists in the world today.

"I believe to take the proposed creed and accept it as the final test would be a step back from our present liberty.

"In regard to polity, I believe that a true union can only be built upon individual liberty, just as Laurier said the British Empire could exist only upon the basis of local autonomy."

NEW CONCERNS.

F. Havey Company, Limited, Toronto, capital $40,000; The Cobourg Horse Show Association; the Stratford Bowling Club.

Everything She Ate SEEMED A BURDEN TO CARRY.

HAD STOMACH TROUBLE FOUR YEARS.

When your food has not been properly digested, your body has not received the benefit it should. The exertions of the gastric juice have been confined entirely to removing the unmasticated undigested portions of food which they cannot properly digest as speedily as possible from the body, thereby only giving the blood a small percentage of nourishment with which to feed the tissues. Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the bowels, promotes perfect digestion, makes pure blood, tones the stomach, and thus restores perfect health and strength to the debilitated system.

Mrs. D. A. Francisco, Rossland, B.C., writes: "I was suffering from stomach trouble of the worst kind for about four years. Everything I ate seemed a burden to carry. I always arose in the morning with a sickening and feverish taste in my mouth and was also troubled with swellings in my hands and feet, which my physician said was due to the disordered state of my stomach. I tried everything that was purchasable, and also consulted two or three physicians, but could find no relief until one of my neighbors told me of a wonderful cure by Burdock Blood Bitters. I used altogether ten bottles and am now perfectly cured. I wish to recommend B.B.B. to anyone who may be so unfortunate as I was.

THE "WARSHIP" SIMCOE IS NOT A WARSHIP

Will Be Used Principally for the Handling of Fog Signals on Lakes.

Toronto, June 14. — The C. G. S. Simcoe is on her first visit to Toronto. Some excitable people who saw her in the St. Lawrence imagined her the H. M. S. Simcoe, but she is as little like a warship as possible. The tales as to her coming to the inland waters for use in case of hostilities do not appear to be borne out by investigation. The boat is an ordinary creature of commerce, fitted out somewhat more completely than usual, as befits the Canadian Government service. She is adapted to the distribution of fog signals, and her present trip to Toronto is the annual one made with the purpost of distributing oil, etc., to the lighthouses.

Not Much of a Warship.

Stories from Montreal way had the Simcoe wearing 18-inch armor, and some imaginative person had pointed out where a gun might be placed. No coating of steel other than the ordinary inch or two is visible to the eye, and the officers laugh at the idea of the boat being armored.

People who went down to the foot of Bay street today to see the much-heralded "Canadian battleship" were vastly disappointed. Only two hundred feet long, she looked quite insignificant where she lay beside the City of Ottawa. The chief feature to distinguish her is a huge crane for handling the fog signals. This contrivance will swing forty-ton weights around without straining a single steel sinew. It is magnificent, but it is not war; even if the upright arm looks a little like the skeleton of a conning tower. Nor is there any secrecy maintained as to the ship. No one would find difficulty in getting aboard and looking her over.

A Crew of Twenty-four.

The boat was built at Walker-on-Tyne, and has a speed of twelve knots. She logged about eleven coming from Cobourg Friday night. There is provision for a wireless equipment, but there is at present no scope for this on the lakes. The Simcoe arrived at Toronto at 7 a.m., and took on coal and oil here, leaving at noon to supply the bay lights. Captain Richmond and his crew of twenty-four men received with smiles the numerous inquiries as to the boat's warlike intentions.

As the boat's draught is thirteen feet, and the water is only twelve feet deep in the western gap, the Gibraltar light had to be supplied by the Simcoe's steam launch. After visiting the lights hereabouts the Simcoe will go to Lake Huron to place a big fog signal now lying aboard her.

UNIVERSITY FOR CHINA

Rev. Lord Rupert Cecil Reports on Plan To Fight Materialism.

London, June 13.—The Rev. Lord Rupert William Ernest Cecil, second son of the late Marquis of Salisbury, has just returned from China, where he says he went "to ascertain the feasibility of promoting a university where materialistic teaching, which is doing such injury in eastern countries, especially China, and which is being represented as the most modern form of culture, might be counteracted."

Lord Rupert says he found the Chinese Government distinctly favorable to the scheme and leading statesmen and educationists wholly tolerant of Christianity and willing to welcome every effort to promote western education.

NO WAR SAYS KAISER

German Emperor Will Tell British Delegation Today.

Berlin, June 14 — The Emperor will receive sixty visiting British clergymen at the palace at Potsdam today. His majesty will make a speech of goodwill toward Great Britain, although probably he will make no mention of recent alarms in England over Germany's naval construction.

The German Government has been waiting for some opportunity to make further expression of this country's pacific aims towards all the powers, and this is considered a favorable occasion clearly and unequivocally to set forth the kindly feeling entertained by Germany toward Great Britain.

It is hoped both by words and a peaceful and just policy to win the British people to the belief that no aggressive designs are entertained against their country.

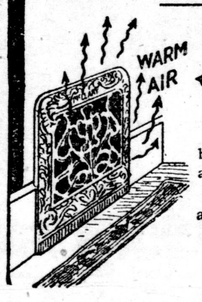
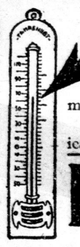
What Sunshine Furnace does

Sunshine Furnace is designed and constructed to heat a house, church, school or store, and does this more satisfactorily than any other known furnace or other style of heating apparatus.

It does this more rapidly than the hot water boiler because, as soon as fire is started in Sunshine Furnace, heated air can be obtained for the rooms.



SUNSHINE FURNACE



It does this better than other furnaces because, being made from exclusive patterns, it has more commendable features.

It does this more economically than the boiler because even air circulation keeps fuel bill low.

It does this more conveniently than the hot water boiler, because it has no radiators to take up room, congregate dust and mar the paper and woodwork.

It does this more hygienically than the boiler because pure air is admitted to the furnace through a cold air pipe.

CHURCH RIVALRY GOOD

President Believes in Competition in Religious Matters.

Washington, D. C., June 13.—That "complete church emulation" is a good thing, and that there should be in this country "no invidious distinctions in elections because of religious beliefs," were the keynotes of the address made last night by President Taft before the Congress of Roman Catholic Missionaries, now in session in this city.

After being introduced by Father Doyle, who referred to the President, quoting another, as the "great harmonizer," Mr. Taft was greeted with an outburst of applause.

He spoke principally of the work of settling in the Philippines the difficulties caused by the close relationship there of church and government. He expressed the opinion that in the end the church would be strengthened by the change there, "as freedom and toleration and the complete separation of church and state have strengthened the church in this country."

He said that there is now no question to be settled in the Philippines concerning the relation of church and government. He said further, "It is a good thing for the Roman Catholic Church that there are other denominations in the Philippines, and that complete church emulation, competition if I may use that term, is a good thing in religion, as well as in other things in life."

CHARTIES CONFERENCE

Prominent Chicago Lady May Be At Head Next Year.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 12. — A woman will probably be chosen president of the next national conference of charities and correction. Indications point to the selection of Julia Lathrop, of Hull House, Chicago, a woman who has ben in charitable work for years, and has bene one of the leaders in the present movement, although she does not happen to be present at this year's session.

Leading officials in the conference say that the plan of selecting a woman leader occasionally has been discussed for a long period, and it is very probable, they state, that Miss Lathrop will be chosen. Another possible candidate from the ranks of the women members is Miss Jane Adams, also of Chicago, who has ben a co-worker with Miss Lathrop for years. Both graduated from the same school at Rockford, Ill.

This morning's session of the conference was devoted to the discussion of these subjects, "Children," "Defectives" and "Families and Neighborhoods," conducted in separate sections.

Henry H. Doddard, Ph. D., of the New Jersey Training School at Vineland, demonstrated the use of the ergograph and the psychometer.

The ergograph is a new instrument designed to measure the fatigue and attention of children, while the psychometer enables the investigator to measure the strength and variabity of the emotions.
