A Prussian force was at Campaigne this forenoon. Paris, Sept 10.—Light draught French gunboats are ascending the Rhine. All the railroads and material, as well as the bridges, in the Department of Seine and Marne have been destroyed.

London, Sept 10.—Information received at the Prussian Embassy at London makes it certain that King William has resolved to ignore the revolutionary Government in Paris as destitute of all shadow of authority. In the event of the occupation of Paris he will treat with no officials save those recognized by the Emperor Napoleon.

London, Sept 10.—The afternoon papers report the following: The Prussians having demanded the surrender of Lyons, the French commandant opened the gates and when the Prussian troops had got well inside the commandant fired a salute blowing up a great number of the enemy.

The Legations of Austria and Russia are busy at work in interest of peace, and it is believed they would have already secured an armistice had not the Government of England blocked the way by its hesitating and bold, hostile attitude. The English Government is believed to have conspired with the King of Prussia contrary to the wishes of Count Bismark in order to crush if possible the Republic.

On high authority Bismark desires neither Alsace nor Lorraine, and is anxious to secure peace as early as possible, but King William is bitterly opposed to any negotiations with the Republic, and insists on advancing on Paris to crush the Revolution before the Emperor can extend to Germany.

Paris, Sept 12.—Senator Mouchon has arrived in Paris. He brings the assurance that the Italian Government has determined to forestall all revolutionary movements in Rome by an official occupation of Roman territory, without the slightest intention of harming the people. The Italian army now occupies all roads, north and south leading into Roman territory, and the Italian squadron is at Civita Vecchia.

The Prussian Government has notified the Italian that it has no intention of interfering in any way with the question of Rome or the occupation of the city. A popular vote will be taken throughout the Papal States upon the annexation of the Papal territory to Italy.

The Ministry has just made public the following important intelligence: The Prussians attacked Toul on Saturday at 5 o'clock in the morning and persisted until 9 in the evening. They were constantly repulsed and many of their batteries dismantled. More than 10,000 Prussians were placed hors de combat.

At Montmedy on Thursday the garrison splendidly repulsed the Prussian attacks. The Prussians have surrounded Meaux, they have arrived in force at Gray and are approaching Noyon.

Paris was cheered this morning by a report that Russia is insisting on an armistice, and also that the United States has sent decided dispatches to Berlin. It is said the Prussian advance has been stopped in consequence.

London, Sept 12.—Advices from Florence are to the effect that the Italian troops entered Roman territory to-day. The Italians will immediately strip the Pope of his power. The local authority of the Papal territory has not been disturbed by the Italians.

A special to the Evening Telegraph, dated London, Sept 12th, says the siege of Paris is now fairly commenced. The Prussian forces in detachments are forced in a series of circles around Paris at a distance of about 25 miles. In this position the army halted at the request of the Russian Minister, that King William and Count Bismark may consider the proposition for an armistice emanating from Russia and Austria. Paris remains tranquil. The roads leading to the city are all closed and no more provisions are going in and what the city now contains must prove sufficient for emergency purposes.

The War in Europe.

"Man proposes, but God disposes. How very striking has this been verified in the present most eventful war. The echoes of the French battle-cry 'On to Berlin,' had not yet died away in the valley of the Moselle, when the shout, 'On to Paris,' was raised by King William's victorious soldiery the passes of the Vosges! The gran army of France was to have made six weeks' march to Berlin. The arm of Prussia made an eight weeks' march to Paris! The announcement made by Napoleon that he would 'return to Paris a conqueror or a corpse' has scarcely been repeated in the streets of the metropolis ere he had laid his unused sword at the feet of King William. Where is all this to end? This crazy daisy whirl of the most astounding events takes one's breath clean away leaving the most profound and the most superficial thinkers upon a level with our common exclamation, 'What next?' What next, indeed! Are the dire consequences of that fatal drink of Ems water to roll on until France shall have ceased to be numbered among the Great Powers? Or is this mad fatal only marching to his own destruction? It is said that the hereditary malady of his family, which carried off his father in a state of religious mania and his brother as a hypochondriac, betray itself in King William through an inconceivable worship of his place an prerogative. He believes in the infallibility of monarchs as devoutly as Pius IX in the infallibility of Pope. So firm is his faith in the divine nature of his position that he keeps, and he never years kept, a minute diary of every thing which happens to him, and when ever any new emergency arises he turns to his diary to see what he did, or did not do, on the corresponding day in the previous years of his life of no seventy-three years. But even William may yet have to learn the truth of the proverb with which the present article commences, as many a proud monarch before him has. What not about the announcement made at the beginning of the present war, that he fought against a dynasty, not against France? Did not that dynasty fall on his feet on the banks of the Menne? Why, then, are his armies beneath the walls of Paris? It may be that, regarding the present merely in the light of a Provisional Government, King William does not recognize the end of the Napoleonic dynasty; and it may be that as this war was forced upon him and so many thousands of his subjects have been sacrificed, he may feel justified in taking the position that from Paris alone will he dictate terms of peace to a nation which thought to dictate its terms to him from Berlin. Such a resolve would not appear altogether unwarlike; yet it may prove to be fatal. Should that marvelous run of 'luck' which has characterized the war up to the present time continue unbroken, we shall doubtless soon hear of Paris being in the hands of the Prussians; and then, indeed, may William make what terms it please him. But if it should so turn out that he has carried victory too far, and has passed from justifiable defense to unjustifiable aggression, is it not possible that the God of Battles in whom he professes trust may yet be found on the side of the French battalions? France is humiliated, but not annihilated; and the announcement that Prussia will pro-
