A GERRY CROSS
Continuation in the Court of Justice of the Appearance of the White Lady.

There is consternation at Berlin. The ghost known as the White Lady has been seen to walk. The apparition has frequently been seen in different castles and palaces belonging to the royal family of Prussia. She is supposed to forbid the death of some of the royal family, especially one of the children. Her last appearance was in 1876, just prior to the death of Prince Waldemar. A soldier on guard at the old castle was witness of the apparition, and in his fright, fled to the guard-room, where he was at once arrested for deserting his post.

Twice she has been heard to speak. In December, 1923, she appeared in the palace at Berlin and said: "I wait for judgment." Again at the castle of Neuhans, in Bohemia, when she said to the princess in German, "The Prince of Prussia and the lady addressed died in a few weeks."

There are two white ladies in fact—one the Countess Agnes and the other the Princess Bertha von Rosenberg, who lived in the fifteenth century. The former was buried alive in a vault in the palace. She was the wife of a margrave of Brandenburg, by whom she had two sons. When the prince became a widower, Agnes thought he would marry again, but he made the same objection, and she poisoned them, for which crime she was buried alive. Another version is that she fell in love with the Prince of Parma and made away with her two daughters, for which crime she was doomed to "walk the earth" as an apparition.

The Princess Bertha is supposed because an annual gift was made to the poor has been discontinued. She appears dressed in white and carrying at her side a bunch of keys.
