

Seasonal and monthly deposition values may vary widely because the amounts deposited depend not only on the varying composition of the rain but also on the highly variable amount of rain that falls.

The measurement of the dry deposition component is at present not possible because there exists no generally accepted method for routine monitoring of dry deposited material.