churches for collections on Sunday, the 28th, and on Sunday, the 4th of September.

Saturday, August 20.—Went out to Highgate to pay a short visit to Martin R. Sharpe, Esq., Churchwarden of St. Michael's Church, who made arrangements with the Rector, the Rev. C. B. Dalton, who was then absent, for a sermon and a collection the following day.

I spent a very delightful evening with Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe, who kindly invited some of their friends to meet me at dinner.

I cannot refrain from mentioning here the many obligations I am under to Mr. Sharpe, for the very deep interest which he took in my Mission, for his invariable kindness towards myself, and for his invaluable advice and assistance during the prosecution of my work, than whom Trinity College has no warmer friend.

Sunday, August 21.—Preached in St. Michael's, Highgate. A collection was made after the sermon, which amounted to £19 17s. 4½d.

Monday, August 22.—Feeling that I required a little relaxation, after so long and uninterrupted application to the arduous duties which devolved upon me, and as little or nothing could be done in London at that season, I took the train for the North of England, and on my way visited York and its magnificent Minster. I then proceeded to Newcastle-on-Tyne, Edinburgh, Stirling, through the Trossacks, Loch Kathrine, Loch Lomond, Tarbut, and Dumbarton, to Glasgow, visiting the different places and objects worthy of notice in each.

Friday, August 26.—Took a steamer from Glasgow, and, after a pleasant run during the night, I reached Dublin about 8 o'clock, and for the first time placed my foot upon the soil of my native land.

I lost no time in calling upon Archdeacon Lee, and made the necessary arrangements for my duty on Sunday. He kindly invited me to stay with him, at his country residence, about five miles from the city.

Sunday, August 28.—Went in by train, with the Archdeacon, to St. Peter's Church, and preached in behalf of the College. The day, unfortunately, was very wet, and the congregation very
