The bill to provide a speedy all-Canadian route to the Yukon gold fields will now be considered in committee of the House of Commons, and amended in any particular that the Thames in West London have been recent debate has shown to be in the public interest. After this measure passes through the committee of the House of Commons, it will go to the Senate, and there is naturally some interest as to its fate in that chamber. We are inclined to hazard the prediction that the Senators will hesitate before taking upon themselves the grave national and business responsibility of throwing out the measure, as it has been predicted in some quarters that they intended

Why Not Pull Together?

A good deal of interest is naturally taken on this continent in the strong expressions of approval of an alliance between Great Britain and the United States, which were given utterance to in a late sederunt of the British House of Commons. Recent happenings in the world's history are very educative in this regard. It has been shown that in her determination to keep China free from Russian and German restrictions, and retain that immense market for the whole trading world, of which the English-speaking population are no small portion, the British people are really fighting the battle of trade freedom for the United States, as well as for themselves. Then the traditional policy of the British nation has always favored freedom, and this has drawn out their sympathy to the United States in the policy of opposition to Spain's outrageous treatment of her Cuban colonists.

History has been rapidly made recently, and so has sentiment. There has been a drawing together of Great Britain and the United States in a manner that has not been possible for many years. We can only hope that this friendly alliance of the English-speaking race will become yet stronger and prove more effective in the banishment of war and the promotion of those interests that make for peace, progress and development. The Advertiser has always held that a moral, if not an organic union, of the two branches of the race would be of enormous advantage to mankind and to civilization.

Prince Krapotkine's first impressions of the Canadian prairie are graphically described with a pleasant autobiographical sketch in the Nineteenth Century. Here is the passage: "All of a sudden we had entered the prairies. A straight line on the horizon, another straight line behind us, marked by the railway metals, which run over a ground so level that the last elevator of Winnipeg could be seen miles behind. A 'fat black earth,' as our peasants would say, and no trees or shrubs for miles round. Only a clorious sunset to admire, such as I had not seen since I was last in a South Russian steppe. 'How monotonous!' was soon remarked by my West Euro-Wine35 pean friends, while I thought to my-self. What an infinite variety of life quors in these steppes!' The poetry of the steppe is an unknown chapter to the west European, even to the middle Russian. It would be vainly sought politan British contemporary points for in most geographical works; one finds it only in the poetry of Koltsoff, in the novels of Oertel, in the soul of the man who was born in the steppe. One must have lived in the steppes, rambled over them on horseback, about and after sunset, inhaled the perfume of the mowed grass, spent the night in the open air, crossed the bou spaces in sledges with galloping horses. to realize and to feel the beauty of the steppes. He who was born in such surroundings feels homesick elsewhere; mountain valleys oppress him, make him feel as a bird in a cage."
