"The Round Up" at the Princess. Extremely picturesque, containing not a few thrills and many novelties, to say nothing of its charming love story, "The Round Up," with Maclyn Arbuckle, will be the offering at the Princess Theatre next week. The production is one of the largest that Klav & Bringer have ever made. The company is a large and able one, and, in addition to the leading players there is an auxiliary interest in the form of genuine western cowboys, cowboys, Mexican vaqueros, Apache Indians and 20 cow ponies from the Arizona cattle ranges.

The locale of the scenes is South-eastern Arizona before the advent of wire fences and during the period when General Crook was chasing Conchise and his braves into the reservation at Fort Grant. The story, also written about a western theme and strongly dramatic, is not of that character that one almost instinctively associates with the term "western play." The personalities in the story are, of course, the rough and homely types of the ranges, but the story is one of such supreme heart interest and so true to human nature generally that it perhaps could be translated to another locale and interpreted by different types of character with fully as great effectiveness as in the setting in which it is now presented.

The scenes of the first two acts show the courtyard of the Allen House at Sweetwater and the living room of Payson's ranch. One of the most dramatic incidents seen on the stage in recent years is introduced when Jack Payson finds Dick Lane dying of thirst in the desert. The men are attacked by Indians and are rescued by "Slim" Hoover and a troop of cavalrymen from Fort Grant. In the act several delightful and entertaining episodes of western life are introduced in the round-up scene. The dramatic suspense is maintained until the final curtain falls, when the author brings his story to an unexpected end.

Lillian Russell Coming. Lillian Russell is the underlined attraction at the Princess Theatre, Monday evening, May 23, in George V. Hodge's comedy, "The First Night," adapted from the German of Rosen and retaining all the original scenes and situations. She will be supported by an exceptionally strong cast, including Digby Bell, Mary Fabre, Susanne Westford, Richard Thornton, Frederick Trenchard, Sydney Booth, Geo. B. Mack, Hayes
