SAINT JOHN N. B., SEPTEMBER 4, 1926.

IT LOOKS LIKE MONEY. Has any interested citizen counted streets at the lunch hour or early in the evening of late, and contrasted the number with that existing a year or two ago? An inspection of Prince William street, of Duke, of the north and south sides of King Square, of the evening overflow into King Street East from the Imperial and the Beatty area. from the Imperial and the Beatty area, of the other city parking spaces, of the Rothesay and Westfield roads at the hour of the morning or the evening flight, is both instructive and highly suggestive. The desirability of direct vision is, of course, incontestible, but every offensive invention produces its defensive counterpart and the destruction of visibility by smoke screens, camouflage and other devices is already practiced. With both fleets manoeuvring in a pall of smoke, the admirals might, one would imagine, just as well remain in their flagships instead of taking to the air in flagplanes. Furthermore, the conduct of the modern operations has resolved it self-largely into the application of "normal methods," by which is meant a number of fixed rules of conduct under varying conditions which supreme commanders know will be carried out by the manders know will be carried out by the work of the modern operated out by the carried out by the manders know will be carried out by the work of the modern operated out by the carried out by the manders know will be carried out by the work of the modern operated out by the first time is a been adopted for paging guests in hotels. Along each of these fine thoroughfares growing summer settlements are linked up in chains ten or fifteen miles long, and many of the houses are of by no means cheap construction.

It is all very well to say, as some do.

It is all very well to say, as some do that a great many motor cars are purchased on the instalment plan, but even in making allowance for that, it is necessary to keep in mind that the manufacturers and agents are not giving away any cars and that payment must be made.

The cars and the cottages together mean money—a great deal of money—and they and other features of city life justify the belief that the people of Saint John are not nearly so poor as, in some moods, they sometimes represent themselves to be. It is true, doubtless,
