HAVE OPEN DEBATE

Men of St. John Baptist Society Discuss Burning of House

"Does a house burn up or down?" This was the question argued at an open debate in the rooms of the Men's Society of St. John the Baptist church, St. James street, yesterday afternoon.

Some of the talkers contended that the materials consumed into gases, a house must be said to "burn up." Others maintained that, although some of the results of the combustion did go upward, they eventually came down to earth again and, therefore, a house "burned down." Considerable merit was evoked by the humorous and ingenious arguments advanced by both sides.

On a standing vote the audience decided that a house "burned down." Those who took part in the debate were James L. Sugrue, J. Leo Killoran, Edward Morrissey, C. McLeod, C. Garret and Thomas Killen.

J. T. Butler, chairman of the entertainment committee, presided at the debate, which was well attended. Yesterday's was the first debate of the series. A fortnight hence the second will take place.
