HOW NURSES OF SCHOOLS HELP THE CHILDREN

Ottawa System Proving so Helpful That More Nurses May Be Employed

"Many children have unclean heads," said Dr. J. H. Putnam, inspector, when asked about the public school nurse inspection, which, he added, is proving satisfactory. Consideration will probably be given to increasing the number of nurses, Dr. Putnam added.

Dr. Putnam went on to explain how the health of children is now a matter of supreme consideration, and in this respect public bodies dealing with schools must not lack ingenuity and forethought in providing the machinery of attention to the physical condition of their young charges.

Ottawa has come to the forefront in this health movement with a view of eliminating to a great extent the possibility of an outbreak and spread of contagious diseases or the prevention of unpleasant features in school life.

In August last the management committee of the Ottawa school board fixed regulations to govern a system of school inspection by nurses and through only recent introduction, the scheme promises to be most satisfactory and to have justified its inauguration.

Dr. J. H. Putnam, who is supervising the scheme, as yet has only two nurses who are engaged in the work of detecting physical defects—Misses Scott and Turnbull. Doubtless the staff of nurses will be augmented, as there are twenty schools to visit and half a day to be spent at each every week.

The child who is given the medical attention, and in the event of that not being procured, instructions are printed as to correct treatment of dirty heads.

A close observation is made of children's throats, teeth, hair, eyelids, hands, ears, and glands. The nurse is invested with power to bandage wounds and apply antiseptic dressings to cuts, burns, and bruises, prescribing medicines being without her jurisdiction.

The medical officer of health is called upon in cases of the discovery of mumps, measles, whooping cough, scarlet fever, diphtheria, chickenpox, smallpox, and other contagious diseases.

This is not a work of assumption of cold authority over the children by the committee, but more of a sympathetic kindly intervention between parent and teacher.

The nurses confer with the teachers and parents concerned in "discovered" cases and parents are encouraged to associate with the nurses at the schools in respect to their children's health. Talks on school and personal hygiene between nurses, teachers and scholars are also a feature of the scheme.

Since September there have been but a few contagious cases.
