POOR DOCUMENT

The Use Of

Harsh, drastic purgatives to relieve costiveness is a dangerous practice, and more liable to fasten the disease on the patient than to cure it. What is needed is a medicine that in effectually opening the bowels, corrects the costive habit and establishes a natural daily action. Such an aperient is found in which, while thorough in action, strengthen as well as stimulate the bowels and excretory organs.

Ayer's Pills,

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels became regular and natural in their movements. I am now in excellent health."—Wm. H. DeLaucett, Dorset, Ont.

"When I feel the need of a cathartic, I take Ayer's Pills, and find them to be more than any other pill I ever took."—Mrs. B. C. Grubb, Burwellville, Va.

"For years I have been subject to constipation and nervous headaches, caused by derangement of the liver. After taking various remedies, I have become convinced that Ayer's Pills are the best. They have never failed to relieve my bilious attacks in a short time; and I am sure my system retains its tone longer after the use of these Pills, than has been the case with any other medicine I have tried."—H. S. Sledge, Welmar, Texas.

FRANCE AND RUSSIA.

The relations of France and Russia have recently attracted the attention of the people of both hemispheres. The visit of the German squadron to Cronstadt, has been merely the occasion of a series of fetes in which a remarkable degree of cordiality has been displayed towards the French by the Russian officers, more cordiality, it would seem, than the Czar quite relished. There are various reports in regard to the outcome of this friendly visit and it is asserted and again denied that a treaty has been arranged between Russia and France. Some say that the treaty which is supposed to have been arranged is a commercial one, while others speak of it as a treaty of alliance between the two powers, and others again profess to ridicule it altogether. It is not easy to get at the truth where there are so many contradictory stories, but it is not unlikely that the French admiral, when he went to Cronstadt, took with him some sort of a document with a view to the arrangement of a treaty of some kind with the Russian government. Whether he has been successful or not may be left to conjecture because the secrets of Russia are well kept and no one but those who are officially interested are permitted to know the truth of the matter. No doubt France would be well pleased to have an offensive and defensive alliance with Russia, but it remains to be seen whether such an alliance would pay the Czar. France, as a republic, stands as the representative of free institutions, while Russia is a despotism and subject to the control of a single man. An alliance between a despotism and a republic is not a very natural one. It is said by some of the French papers that this alliance, if it has been made, has been due to the assent of England to the triple alliance. But there is no proof that England has involved herself with Germany and the other powers of that alliance for the purposes of defense or otherwise. The visit of the French squadron to Portsmouth will be an offset to the visit of the same squadron to Cronstadt and is to be attended with a great deal of pomp and international hospitality so that after all it is quite possible that the French people will be as enthusiastic over an English alliance presently as they now seem to be over a Russian one.

IN THE SUBURBS.

"We may indeed secure for ourselves," says Sir John Lubbock, "endless variety without leaving our own firesides," and it is easy for us of St. John to secure for ourselves most of the pleasures of travel, without its discomforts, at an expense of nothing more than a few hours walk from our own homes. They who love nature and are unburdened by those things which are accepted as riches, if blessed with ordinary physical endurance, may feast their eyes and minds, in those hours of relaxation which are granted to us all, with such visions of loveliness, that change each moment, like the pictures presented by the kaleidoscope, whenever they will in almost any of the suburbs of the city. Nature is the most impartial of mothers. She digs the channel for a river, builds a mountain, plants a forest, fills the orchards with bloom or red and yellow fruit, decorates the roadsides with golden rod and daisies, and then with the birds and the sunshine sends out an invitation for all her children to come and see and refresh themselves. "Am I not to be envied?" said a deck hand on one of the Hudson steamers to a passenger, pointing to one of the finest estates on that noble river. "Surely, you do not own that property!" answered the passenger. "Yes," was the reply. "I own it but am not obliged to live on it. Still I enjoy it just as much as the man in whose name it is taxed." Nature is open to us all and if we miss the delights which she prepares for us, the fault lies in our eyes and understanding and not at her door.

It is curious that while the fields and woods and the seas are open to us all, and we know almost intuitively that certain causes always produce certain effects, we do not know even the outside life of men. "Are we competent," asks W. R. Greg, "to pronounce even on their deeds? Do we know half the acts of wickedness or of virtue even of our most immediate fellows? Can we say with any certainty, even of our nearest friend, this man has not committed such a sin—broken such a commandment? Let each man ask his own heart. Of how many of our best and of our worst acts and qualities are our most intimate friends utterly unconscious? How many virtues does the world give us credit for that we do not possess? How small a portion of our evil deeds and thoughts ever come to light? Even of our few redeeming goodnesses how large a portion is known to God only! Truly we walk in a vain show.

It matters little in what direction one may ramble of a morning or afternoon, the result is almost invariably the same and full of enjoyment. Go by the Suspension Bridge, and there a spectacle is presented of marvellous beauty. Turn to the right by Mr. Manchester's residence and observe in his beautiful fields the results of intelligent and well directed labor go on by the pleasant country road, along whose sides the wild roses are still in bloom, till South Bay glimmers through the trees and the residence of Dr. Walker discloses itself, and returning, turn aside to the home of Mr. Woodman, who must be accounted a philosopher whose "life flows like an untroubled river," by his surroundings. Then near the Carleton reservoir a multiplicity of roads and bye-ways diverge; the morning or afternoon rambler should not tax his mind to choose which he will follow; they all have their pleasant views and surprises and most of them, by some unlooked-for turn, will bring him home.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The GAZETTE is in full sympathy with the movement to make Saturday a general half holiday instead of the present system by which one half the stores are closed on Friday and the other half on Saturday.

Mrs. Senator Stanford, by her contributions has been instrumental in establishing five Kintergarden schools so located as to be accessible to the poor children of every part of San Francisco. These schools are already well attended, and many children who without them would have grown up in ignorance and vice give promise of a maturity of usefulness and honor.

An international convention is to be held at Berlin next month to consider means of reducing the danger of accidents to working men. The best means that can be adopted are the enactment of laws making employers strictly responsible for accidents resulting from the use of defective machinery or appliances of any kind, and a better education of the working men themselves in the trades at which they are employed.

This week Mr. Campbell, of the Windsor and Annapolis railway, places on the route from Halifax to Yarmouth a fast train with parlor car attached, which he will call the Flying Bluenose. This train will leave Halifax at 9.15 a. m., and arrive at Yarmouth at 6 p. m. Those who remember spending a whole night in the mail coach between Digby and Yarmouth, or a full twenty-four hours between Halifax and Annapolis, will see in this movement an evidence of progress in keeping with others which were pointed out in these columns a few days since.

Financial.

Henry Clews & Co., report under date, New York, Aug. 8:— During the past week, the Stock Market has shown more activity and some recoveries in prices; but the advances have been mainly due to increased sales by the "bears" having created sudden demands for covering "shorts," while there seems to be no improvement in the real spirit and tone of the market.

All the symptoms indicate that it is hopeless to expect any extravagant buying spirit until there are stronger indications of a removal of the prevailing distrust than at present exists. The booming tendency of good crops is now little heard of, for the reason that there are so many serious obstacles to that factor having the effect upon prices that would attend it under normal conditions.

No doubt, the current adverse probabilities or possibilities are exaggerated in the public mind; but that is a consideration of little practical value; for in a dubious situation it is but human to discount and to prepare for the worst that may happen, and prudent men are always found willing to make a sacrifice in order to escape possible disaster. While, therefore, it may be conceded that fear is now exaggerating more or less the gravity of some aspects of the foreign situation, yet that fact cannot be expected to prevent a great deal of realizing on securities and therefore cannot be trusted to avert a consequent decline in prices.

The resumption of the silver agitation is also calculated to encourage this distrust and is actually amounting to a pretty stubborn "bear" factor. The apprehension on this account, however, is perhaps more due to the seriousness of the view taken of the situation that would arise should a free coinage law be actually enacted, than it is to any positive expectation that such a measure will really find a place in our statutes. Politics, however, are in an abnormally confused condition. Parties are willing to buy success through almost any concessions to popular clamor; and however repugnant free-coinage may be to the common sense and the moral sense of a majority of our people, it is not impossible that the fundamental principles of a sound currency may be sacrificed to win a small minority of misguided voters. There is therefore uncertainty about the final outcome of the silver agitation; and but a small degree of uncertainty about a matter so vital to investments and to the general welfare of the country is quite sufficient to depress the Stock Market.

These uncertainties have their natural effect upon the banks and upon lenders generally. The reasons that are inducing European banks to accumulate cash and hold to it tenaciously are causing our own banks to keep their loanable resources within easy reach. They will lend on call to any extent and at almost any rates; but time loans can be procured only with the utmost difficulty and upon a class of collaterals that are very scarce. It is true that the last bank statement showed an amount of surplus reserve 118 per cent higher than that of the same date in 1890 and 1889; but it is also true that the West will have a wholly unprecedented surplus of wheat to send East, which places us in a condition of very delicate dependence on the problematical disposition of Europe to exchange its gold for our grain.

—On Tuesday last at two o'clock six young girls engaged in the interesting ceremony of spreading the first trowels of mortar on the first stone that was laid of the All Saints Parish House. The names of the girls are Pauline Heighton; Annabel Porter; Ethel Pugh; Hazel Parsons; Maud Trott; and Nellie Stansfield. Mr. Pippy the contractor piloted the youthful builders.—Springhill News.

AS OTHERS SAW HIM.

How General Sherman Got Information About Himself.

There was a big celebration by the Grand Army, says the San Francisco Examiner, and as a special train full of members from New York passed Elizabeth, N. J., a tall, gray headed man entered one of the cars and took a seat next to a committeeman, who was decorated with more badges and medals than a French field marshal.

"Going down to the jamboree, comrade?" asked the committeeman.

"Yes, sir," said the tall man.

"In the war, eh?"

"All through," replied the newcomer, with a smile.

"Of course you were with Grant," said the New York member, with a humorous wink.

"Part of the time."

"Well, I was with Sherman—Atlanta to the sea, you know. Many's the jolly night I've spent playing poker with old Tecump. He couldn't play worth a dern, though."

"Couldn't eh?" said the veteran, with interest.

No: it was like finding money. I've a great mind to tell the boys of a little incident that occurred during the great march, but as the 'old man' is to be here himself tonight I guess it wouldn't do."

"I shouldn't mind that."

"Well, I dunno. You see, it was like this: Just after we struck the Weldon railroad we had a devil of a fight. About noon it let up a little and Sherman and I borrowed a drum from the band for a table and went into the bushes for a little game of draw."

"Queer time for poker."

"O, you see fighting was a chestnut to us in those days, while poker was a good deal. Well, I horsed the old man pretty bad, and when at last he opened a jackpot he was about cleaned out, so he wrote out his pay receipt for the next month and threw it in the pot. I raised him $200. Just then a bullet zipped through the drum and the action was under way again. The old man jumped up. 'Pete,' he says—Tecump always called me Pete—'Pete, we can't play this hand just now, but we'll finish it after the scrimmage. Here I'll put my hand under this stone and you put yours in that hollow log.' We did so and rushed for our horses."

"Hot fight that," said the tall veteran reflectively.

"You bet. Every time I got near the general he'd stands up in his stirrups, wave his sword and yell, 'A hundred better, Pete,' and I'd holler back, 'A hundred better nor you.' It was most night before he called me, and then the pot was a couple of thousand. After supper he went out, hunted up the cards, and showed 'em down. I had three aces and two kings, and Tecump had four kings and a ace. Singular, wasn't it."

"Remarkable. How did you account for it?"

Account for it? Why somebody had been monkeying with the gen'rals hand, that's what! I don't insinuate anything, mind, but you bet your boots I never played Tecump again. But here's the junction—let's go out and have a drink. What might your name be, comrade?"

"William T. Sherman."

A WOMAN'S WAY.

She Packed Everything in Her Big Trunks.

Said a woman who lives in an apartment hotel: "Just as I was going out one day the lady in the rooms across the hallway of the apartment hotel begged to see me. She looked dreadfully and she was half crying.

"Won't you please lend me a dress, or—or a cloak. I have to catch a train,' she gasped.

"She seemed to need a dress, but I knew her only slightly and I made up my mind she had gone mad.

"'My trunks have all gone,' she wailed. 'John is to meet me at the wharf. We sail for Europe in an hour. I simply can't miss that boat. I have no one to turn to. I cannot get a dress made; you can see that yourself. If you have a human heart you will help me out. Give me a cloak and—and a pair of shoes and a—a thick veil. Oh, please be quick.'

"I told her that she needed rest and perfect quiet and that I would rub her head. I asked where she got the dress she had on.

"'It's an old thing I was going to leave,' she sobbed, 'and I don't want my head rubbed. I want some clothes. You see packing is such warm work, I decided to put on these old things and just slippers: you must give me shoes, too, and—oh, I shall miss that boat.'

"My dear madam—

"'Oh, don't you understand," she shrieked. 'I have packed everything—everything. The clean clothes I had laid out and my travelling dress and everything. They are all packed—and gone—gone. I had forgot I had these things on—and I packed everything—everything, and John is at the, wharf now with the children from their grandmother's and you will not help me.'

"She went completely into hysterics right in my hallway, poor little woman. She was a good deal smaller than I, but I fixed her up. I wonder what John said when he saw her."

Poetry Defined.

A little girl of seven years was asked what she learned at school.

"I learn poetry," she replied.

"Do you know what poetry is?"

"Oh yes," she replied, quite naturally. "It is lines which end alike, but which you don't understand.

A Broad Churchman.

"Who is that strapping big fellow in the striped bathing suit?"

"That? Oh, he's an Episcopal minister. Rector of St. Peter's-By-the-Sea."

"He's built more like a prize fighter, isn't he? Just look at those shoulders."

"Oh, well, you see that's because he's a Broad Churchman."

Purify Your Blood

The importance of keeping the blood in a pure condition is universally known, and yet there are very few people who have perfectly pure blood. The taint of scrofula, salt rheum, or other foul humor is hereditted and transmitted for generations, causing untold suffering, and we also accumulate poison and germs of disease from the air we breathe, the food we eat, or the water we drink. There is nothing more conclusively proven than the positive power of Hood's Sarsaparilla over all diseases of the blood. This medicine, when fairly tried, does expel every trace of scrofula or salt rheum, removes the taint which causes catarrh, neutralizes the acidity and cures rheumatism, drives out the germs of malaria, blood poisoning, etc. It also vitalizes and enriches the blood, thus overcoming that tired feeling, and building up the whole system. Thousands testify to the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier. Full information and statements of cures sent free.

Spring and Summer, 1891.

JAS. S. MAY & SON,

MERCHANT TAILORS,

(Domville Building,)

Prince William Street.

Beg to announce that they are receiving their new sprin stock, consisting of West of England and Scotch Suitings, Diagonals, Pant Goods and Overcoatings.

These goods are from the best markets, and we are prepared to offer our customers and the public generally good value for their money. Prices subject to 10 per cent. for net cash. Samples sent by mail.

OATS! OATS!

OUR faith in high prices led us to purchase very largely in the early part of the season. Our stock is now coming forward rapidly and can offer dealers at with the advantage of having a large number cars to select from.

We predict sixty cents per bushel later, and would advise our friends to put away all they require for winter and spring.
