OPINION.

Public opinion is stronger than law,
Upon it all government's based;
Nations, the grandest the world ever saw,
Without it would soon be effaced.
A safety valve 'gainst the outburst of sin,
And it sways the mass of mankind,
The cause of turbulent wars it has been,
But it ruleth the world we find.

Public opinion whenever defied
Requires courage and strength of will,
But it moveth on, a resistless tide,
That nothing can quiet or still.
All law without it is futile and weak,
Opinion's conviction expressed,
Through it the thought of the masses, we seek,
To follow its trend's always best.

Some men's opinions are other men's tools,
To carve out the workings of fate.
All have opinions, unless they are fools,
Some biased by malice and hate.
Opinions once formed, if wrong, changed should be—
Conditions of life change so fast;
Opinions with right and truth should agree,
The day of "stupidity's" past.

Some men's opinions are crystalized thought,
Or express but selfish desire,
Others' opinions are readily bought,
While some to high motives aspire.
Opinions of some are simply absurd,
And framed without reason or thought,
While others the world profoundly has stirred,
And truths of the Infinite taught.

"I was bound for the nearest ranch or camp where a woman could be found; but, as luck would have it, I went through without trying. I had gone farther from men and things, however, than I thought, and this return pursuit was a million times worse than the other, for I couldn't go fast enough to shake Death, who ran with his hand on my cantle or rode on my horse's rump. It was then I found Alluna. She was with a hunting party of Pah-Utes, who knew nothing of me nor of the white man's affairs and cared less, and when I saw the little squaw I rode my horse up beside her, laid the sick child in her arms, then tumbled out of the saddle. They had a harder job to pull me through than they did to save Merridy.

"The little one was playing around several days before I got back my reason. Meanwhile the party had moved north, taking us with them, and, as it happened, just missing a posse who were returning from the desert.

"When I was able to get about I told Alluna that I must be going, but as I told her I watched her face and saw the sign I wanted. The white girl had clutched at her like she had at me, and she couldn't give her up, so I made a dicker with her old man. It took all the money I had to buy that squaw, but I knew the kiddie must have a woman's care, and the three of us started out soon after alone and broke.

"Since then we three have never rested. I left them once in Idaho and went back to Mesa, riding all the way, mostly by night, but Bennett was gone. He'd run down mighty fast after Merridy died till he had a killing in his place. Instead of stopping to face it out the yellow in him rose to the surface, and he left before sunup, as I had left, making a clean get-away, too, for there was no such hullabaloo raised about killing a man as there was about the other. So my trip was all for nothing.

"Let me in! Quick! I've got work for you to do!"

"I figured it wouldn't be right to either you or Necia to let you go it blind, and so I came in to tell you this whole thing and to give myself up."

Gale stopped, then poured himself another drink.

"To give yourself up?" echoed Burrell vaguely. "How do you mean?"

He had sat like one in a trance during the long recital, only his eyes alive. "You can't find sufficient for murder," said the trader. "I have been for fifteen years, and there's no chance in the world for me to prove my innocence."

"Have you told Stark?" the young man inquired.

"No, you know I would not. I never could. She might disbelieve. What's more, you mustn't tell her yet. Wait till I give the word."

"John Gale," said the lieutenant, "you're the bravest man I ever knew and the best." He choked a bit. "You sacrificed all that life meant when this girl was a baby, and now, when she has come into womanhood you give up your blood for her. By all that's great, you are a man! I want your hand!"

Then, turning suddenly: "But what about Bennett, Mr. Gale? You say you never found him!"

The trader answered after a moment's hesitation. "He is still at large," at which his companion exclaimed, "I'll love to meet him in your stead!"

Gale seemed pressed with a desire to speak, but even while he hesitated out of the silent night there came the sound of quick footsteps approaching briskly, as if the owner were in haste and knew whither he was bound.

"Lieutenant Burrell!" a gruff voice cried. "Let me in! Quick! I've got work for you to do! Open up! This is Ben Stark!"

CHAPTER XV.

ACE KNOT TIGHTENED.

A DAY of shattered hopes is a desolate thing, but the night of such a day is desolate indeed. In all his life Poleon Deret had never sunk to such depths of despondency, for his optimistic philosophy and his buoyant faith in the goodness of life forbade it. The arrival of the freight steamer afforded him some distraction, but there was only small consignment for the store, and that was quickly disposed of; so, leaving the other citizens of Flambeau to wrangle over their private merchandise, he went back to his solitary vigil, which finally became so unbearable that he sought to escape his thoughts, or at least to drown them for a while, amid the lights and life and laughter of Stark's saloon.

Runnion annoyed him with his volubility, for the news of his good fortune had fired the man with a reckless disregard for money, and he turned to gaming as the one natural recourse of his ilk.

It was shortly after midnight that Stark came into the place. Poleon was not too absorbed in his own fortunes to fail to notice the extraordinary ferocity and exhilaration of the saloon keeper; nor that his face was keener, his nostrils thinner, his walk more nervous and his voice more cutting than usual when he spoke to Runnion:

"Come here!"

"I'll be with you when I finish this hand," said the player over his shoulder.

"Come here!" Stark snapped his command, and Runnion threw down his cards.

Drawing the reluctant gambler aside, Stark began to talk rapidly to him, almost within earshot of Poleon, who watched them, idly wondering what Stark had to say that could make Runnion start and act so queerly. Well, it was their affair. They made a bad pair to draw to. He knew that Runnion was the saloon keeper's lieutenant and obeyed implicitly his senior's commands. He could distinguish nothing they said, nor was he at all curious until a knot of noisy men crowded up to the bar and, forcing the two back nearer to the table where he sat, his sharp ears caught these words from Runnion's lips:

"Not with me! She'd never go with me!" And Stark's reply:

"She'll go where I send her and with anybody I tell her to."

The Frenchman lost what followed, for a newly dealt hand required study. He scanned his cards and tossed them face up before the dealer; then he overheard Runnion say:

"It's the only one in camp. He might sell it if you offered him enough." At this Stark called one of the men at the bar aside, and the three began to dicker.

"Not a cent less," the third man announced loudly. "There ain't another Peterborough in town."

Going outside, Runnion said again to Stark:

"She won't go with me, Ben. She don't like me. You see, I made love to her, and she got mad and wanted me killed."

"She'll never know who you are until it's too late to turn back," said the other, "and you are the only man I can trust to take her through. I can trust you. You owe me too much to be crooked."

"Oh, I'll act square with you! But, look here, what's all this about anyhow? Why do you want that girl? You said you didn't care for her that way. You told me so yourself. Anyway, I ain't the safest kind of a chaperon for a good looking girl."

Stark laid a cold hand on Runnion's shoulder close up to his neck.

"Never mind what I said. She's mine, and you've got to promise to be straight with her. I've trusted you before, and if you're not on the level now say so. It will save you a lot of trouble."

"Oh, all right!" exclaimed Runnion testily. "Only it looks mighty queer."

He melted into the darkness, and Stark returned to his cabin, where he paced back and forth impatiently, smiling evilly now and then, consulting his watch at frequent intervals. A black look had begun to settle on his face, but it vanished when Necia came, and he met her with a smile.

JOAN'S LETTER.

Is lovely woman going to make herself grotesque?

How shall a woman appear at her best? Suggestions by a French artist.

Her furniture was petrified with good behaviour.

Not many large functions, but list of happenings was well filled.

All the weekly social events in Joan's Letter.

Is lovely woman going to make herself grotesque by adopting the manly trousers? asks Eleanor Ames, in one of the recent magazines. She first tried the "hobble," says the writer, but felt it bound her independent spirit too tightly. Then she slashed it at the side and got one foot free. Now she threatens to slash it up the centre and set both feet free—effect trousers! The question arises—will there be room enough in the narrow path of propriety for her long, swinging, manly strides?

Here are some suggestions on "how a woman may appear at her best," by a French artist. They are well worth passing on: Keep the lines of your garments long and unbroken and avoid fussiness and detail in the designs you select. Never wear a blouse of one color and a skirt of another. Carry the lines of your skirt up to your body. Be well dressed and feel that you are. You may not be a beauty (how few there are, alas!) but you can be a well groomed, tastefully dressed woman and in any place and any circle you will be arresting.

A gown of soft, white chantilly lace—draped close about the ankles and all a fluff about the hips with feather-edged flounces; belted with ribbon fastened in a great flaring bow with falling ends. This is described as an ideally up-to-date costume for the tall and serenely fair young debutante.

Woolens, as well as velvets, have advanced in beauty, as the latest fashion authorities inform us. Broadcloths come in every hue, while Scotch tartans are much worn on the other side of the water for tailored suits. For walking costumes, rich dark burgundy and panne will have the ascendancy over sergeant green, dark blue or even taupe and black. Everything in velours finish will have the precedence over cloth. Brocaded crepes and velvet brooches are the very newest for afternoon gowns.

"Tall, fluffy, furry and swaying." Such is the alluring description of the very newest thing in millinery, the "Fox-Tail Mount." Very pretty, but very unusual, is the verdict on this newest fashion whim, which is so "wobbly" that it is unlike anything and cannot be fashioned into anything but a tall, fluffy, waving tail. The new trimming, however, is the "dernier cri," as is fashion's very latest vagary. This latest creation, we are informed, has reached Montreal, where it is being viewed by the fair sex with mixed sensations of joy, doubt, and wonder.

"Your furniture is nice, but it is petrified with good behaviour," laughed a woman to another woman friend, who had asked an opinion of the new house. "Pull it around a little," she advised, "so that it may be used comfortably." "There never was a carpet," she continued, "that authorized the banishment of sunshine. I would open the windows and unlock the doors of the bookcase and have some flowers and magazines scattered around the room. Houses without these little minor touches are negative—dreary and uninteresting and not meant to be lived in."

We have all seen such houses. The blinds are always pulled close for fear a ray of sun should penetrate. Inside, the house may be furnished en suite, but in every other respect it is about as "home like" as a hospital. Clean and orderly. Yes, but it isn't human. He who described a home as a state of mind, hit it well.

While not so brimful of large and important functions as was last week, this one, taking everything collectively, has been very pleasant. The Bridge season is opening up again, some of the winter clubs have already been resumed, and at the Waegwoltic, Saraguay and other places of meeting several successful little informal parties were held during the week.

The Local Council of Women have issued a circular concerning courses in dressmaking, millinery, fancy work and plain sewing, commencing Monday next at the Council House, Young Avenue, and continuing through the winter months until the Spring. The course of 20 lessons in millinery and dressmaking will be $10; fancy work, $5, and plain sewing, $2.50. The classes will be in charge of Mrs. Hopkins, who, the circular informs us, is an expert needlewoman artist.

When the Council decided to hold the course, Mrs. Hopkins went to New York, and in an expert department of Columbia College, obtained the very latest knowledge and ideas. While in New York the lady was deputed as buyer for the Art decoration department of the college, and consequently obtained an entre to the exclusive and fashionable shops in the Metropolis.

Mrs. F. H. Sexton is convenor of the committee, and application to attend the classes should be made to her, or to Miss Claire Strickland, who is treasurer.

Classes in clay modelling for boys and girls will also be a feature of the classes at the Council House this winter. Miss Mary Ritchie has kindly consented to take charge of these classes.

The tennis season, now almost over, has been a most successful one, the matches between the various clubs giving additional interest and zest to the play. At the South End, the handicap tournament was brought to a close this week, with some exceptionally fine play in the finals. Bedford and Rockingham have been holding similar closing tournaments. The players have had a splendid season, and all are sincerely sorry that it is over.

Corn boils are popular at the Arm, at Rockingham, Birch Cove and Bedford just now, and any mild evening, if you should visit any of these charming resorts and go down near the shore you will see the bright firelight illuminating the space around the supper party; the pot boils merrily, while an aroma of corn and coffee floating out on the crisp air are delightfully appetising.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Twining and family moved from their cottage at the Arm this week to Birchdale, where they will spend the winter.

Mrs. E. L. Philps, Victoria Road, was the hostess at a pleasant thimble party on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Pickford left Wednesday for Montreal, en route to the old country for the winter.

Captain and Mrs. Farquhar and family moved this week to town from their cottage across the Arm.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. P. Webster and family are returning to town next week.

Mrs. (Rev.) L. J. Donaldson and children returned on Monday from a pleasant visit to Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. Paysant at Bang's Falls.

Mrs. J. J. Ritchie and the Misses Ritchie, who have been visiting in Annapolis, are expected home to-day.

Miss Nora Jones will spend the winter with her sister, Mrs. Cox, in Malta.

Miss Marshall Saunders is visiting friends in Wolfville.

The marriage of Miss Zoe Cainahan, Brenton street, and Mr. Cunningham, C. E., of Sydney, takes place at the end of October in St. Mary's Cathedral.

Miss Anderson, of St. John, N. B., who had been visiting Judge and Mrs. Russell, left this week for home.

Miss Octavia Hayward is visiting friends in New York, with whom she will spend the winter.

The tennis season closed to-day at the South End Club after a most successful season. Tea will be served this afternoon and there will likely be a large farewell gathering.

Much to the regret of Society generally, the Cornwall sailed on Tuesday. Many functions were given in their honor while here, and they in return entertained with their usual hospitality.

Those who missed hearing Edward Lankow and his assisting artists missed one of the most delightful musical events that it has been our good fortune ever to hear on our concert stage. Looking around at the very limited audience one felt that a very big majority of musical people and others interested were not present. Knowing the great reputation of the famous singer, one was greatly surprised that he should not have had a packed house. However, the audience made up in appreciation what it lacked in numbers, and the artists were accorded their full meed of praise for the magnificent display of talent, and the concert was enjoyed in every least detail.

A number of dinner parties and other functions have been given during the week for the Captain and officers of the German naval training ship "Hertha." Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Grant entertained at dinner on Monday night at "Armdale." Mrs. Grant also entertained the cadets one afternoon at Tennis. Colonel Fages gave a large dinner at Wellington in their honor, and last night Colonel Rutherford gave a dinner at Artillery Park. Other functions are spoken of for next week.

Mrs. Geo. Taylor, of Fredericton, N. B., who has been visiting friends in the city, returned home yesterday.

Mrs. W. R. Foster, Dartmouth, entertained at a very pleasant Bridge party of ladies and gentlemen on Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Morrison, South St., was the hostess at a very successful ladies' Bridge party on Wednesday afternoon.

The Ladies' Musical Club will resume meetings for the winter season on Thursday evening, October 16, at the School for the Blind. The paper will be on Russian music and will be given by Mrs. William McNab.

Mrs. W. Gore Foster was the hostess at a ladies bridge on Wednesday afternoon at her residence, Dartmouth.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy F. Bessanson, of Wolfville, are at Birchdale.

Mrs. A. Duncan, and the Misses Duncan, moved on Thursday from their cottage at Birch Cove to the Alexandra for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Toler, who arrived in the city this week, have received a cordial welcome from the many friends made here during their residence among us last winter.

Miss Anna Doherty has been warmly welcomed by her wide circle of admirers in the city on her arrival here this week.

Miss Doris Woolridge, the leading lady of the Academy Players, is at the Hillside Hall. The many admirers she made when here for a week last season are glad to know she is to be with us again.
