CHAPTER XXXII.

DEEDS OF DARKNESS.

"He is dead! Open the windows! The room is close and the air sickly!" cried the doctor, feeling for the heart of the pallid man before him.

The windows were thrown wide open and one of the servants summoned.

Doctor Gladell wrote a hasty note to another physician, and one to the coroner, and dispatched them both by the servant, who stood with mouth and eyes wide open, gazing upon the body of his master.

Meanwhile Lawyer Mellen was examining the will found in Major Grant's cold hand. The doctor bent over his shoulder. When they had glanced over the will Doctor Gladell said:

"This makes it bad for the widow."

"Yes sir—yes. I see how it was. Major Grant has but lately married. Before he went to Europe this will was drawn up. You can see that by the dates. Since his return he has either forgotten the existence of this will, or——"

"It is more probable that he has been putting this business off from day to day, until his extreme weakness warned him that another day would be too late. I have been trying to urge him to attend to his last duties for several days, but he was like all other men. He hoped to put off dying by putting off all preparations for death."

"I am sorry that we did not arrive a little sooner. Goldie will be——"

"What, sir?" asked the doctor, who was a little hard of hearing.

Mr. Mellen replied:

"I was saying that it was a pity that we did not start earlier in the day. In all probability he meant to destroy this will and make another in favor of his young wife."

"Where is she?"

"Gone over to the city, I heard some of the servants say," replied the lawyer absently.

He was thinking how entirely poor Goldie would be at the mercy of the cruel woman who was lying in the chamber across the hall.

From her he expected no mercy for Goldie, and his mind grew troubled as he thought of the probable consequences of this delay.

While he was yet ruminating the coroner arrived, and with him came the physician summoned by Doctor Gladell.

A few moments later the carriage of Major Grant rolled up the avenue, and Mrs. Grant, pale and greatly excited, hastened to the chamber of her dead husband, whom she had left cheerful and seemingly as well as he had been for many days.

She entered the room without glancing at any of its occupants, and, throwing herself upon the cold breast of him who had so loved her, she clung to him with a childish abandonment of grief.

Doctor Gladell gently lifted her up and led her to her own chamber, where he left her in care of her maid. He saw how wild her grief was making her, and feared a return of her recent illness.

Then commenced preparations for the funeral.

Mrs. Whitney did not make her appearance until the following day. Then she entered the room where Mrs. Grant sat holding Frankie's hand.

"I want Frankie to come into the nursery," she said.

"Frankie go and play with Crissy," said his mother.

"Please let me stay with you, mamma," pleaded the child.

"I do not want him to play with Crissy; I wish him to remain in the nursery," answered Mrs. Whitney coldly.

"Ah! Then he may stay with me. He does not wish to go away."

"Mrs. Grant, beware how you try to interfere with the management of my children!" angrily retorted Mrs. Whitney.

"Why, Belle, Frankie is mine!" meekly replied the sorrowful woman.

"Yours! Can you prove it?"

"Belle! Dear sister, do not torment me. Yesterray——"

"Yesterday is not to-day. Come, Frank."

"No. Mamma says I may stay," he said, clinging to his mother.

"Do not get up a disgraceful scene while he lies in there. If you have no love for me, I beg of you to have respect for him. Wait until his body is put in the tomb before you again commence your persecutions. I am nearly broken-hearted. He was my only friend, Belle. Let us have peace until after this is over, then I care not what becomes of me so that little Frankie does not suffer," she replied, clasping her boy in her arms.

"Perhaps your old lover, Frankie's father, may help to heal your broken heart," tauntingly responded Mrs. Whitney, going from the room.

A presentiment of coming evil clouded the heart of Mrs. Grant as she listned to the words of her heartless sister, but she only sighed and longed in vain for the support of the still heart, which had always borne strength and tenderness for her, and on which she had leaned fearlessly.

Like a dream in which she bore no part, this woman saw the hours go by. She heard the solemn words of exhortation and prayer spoken over the coffin, in which reposed all that earth gave her of love and friendship. She looked her last farewell upon the still face, and turned away from the tomb with the sense of utter loneliness which must come once to every heart.

Back to the mansion went the few mourners who had followed all that was earthly of Major Grant to the tomb, and Christopher Mellen read the last will and testament, which gave all the worldly possessions of Major Grant to his two nephews, Grant and Frank Whitney.

Even this failed to arouse the young widow from her stupor of her grief. She heard the words of the will as one would hear something in which no interest was felt, and when the others had left the room she went too. In her own chamber Christopher Mellen found her sitting by the window with hands folded meekly upon her lap, and downcast eyes. He approached her and without a word enfolded her in his arms, and, drawing her head to his bosom kissed her pale brow. His silent sympathy awoke the angel of tears in her heart, and she wept.

When she had grown calm again her brother said:

"You must come to my home Colodie. It is not grand like this. We have but four rooms, and they are plainly furnished, but you will find love there, and, I hope, contentment."

She looked up quickly.

"May I take Frankie there?" she asked.

"Certainly. If Belle will give him up," he answered.

Then Mrs. Grant told him of that last afternoon with her husband, and repeated all the solemn promises made by Mrs. Whitney.

As she finished speaking, Mrs. Whitney entered the room unannounced. She frowned angrily when she saw how perfectly united her brother and sister seemed to be, and coldly asked:

"Do you propose leaving Laurel Glade at once, Mrs. Grant?"

Christopher answered for her:

"No. She will remain a few days here, that people may say you are not quite heathen! Then I shall come for her."

Mrs. Whitney left the room without speaking.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Bell's Cruel Triumph.

Frank Whitney was not present when the last sad rites were said over the body of Major Grant. They had been unable to reach him by mail, and upon the day after the funeral a brief note addressed to Major Grant was placed in the hands of his widow. It was from Frank, announcing his immediate departure for Germany, where he proposed to continue his studies. It made no allusion to any return or future meeting, but at the close asked to be remembered to Mrs. Grant.

Tha letter was read, folded, and put away, and the young widow returned to the library, where her brother, Lawyer Mellen, awaited her.

"It was only a note from Frank, announcing his departure for Germany," she explained, when she had taken the chair he handed her.

Lawyer Mellen had not returned to his home in New York after the funeral. He would not leave his young sister so entirely at the mercy of Mrs. Whitney, from whose face, at the breakfast table, he had gathered that a storm was brewing.

When Mrs. Grant had entered the breakfast room in company with her brother, she saw Mrs. Grant Whitney seated at the table pouring the coffee.

"I was tired of waiting for you," she said coldly, without looking up.

Christopher Mellen's face flushed angrily; but he only motioned Mrs. Grant to a seat beside him, which she accepted. It was quite evident that Mrs. Whitney meant to assume her position at the beginning of her course.

This was the first time that she had ever had any real authority in the house, and right well she wore her crown. Coldly polite to Lawyer Mellen and Mrs. Grant, she bore herself haughtily and proudly throughout the breakfast hour. As they left the table Lawyer Mellen said:

"Mrs. Grant and myself would like to see you, Mr. Whitney, and your wife, in the library."

Grant Whitney looked up inquiringly, but Mrs. Whitney replied:

"We will be there in about an hour;" and, signaling to her husband, they left the room together.

Mrs. Grant and her brother proceeded at once to the library, where they awaited the coming of Grant Whitney and his wife. As the clock struck nine they entered the room, and, seating themselves on a sofa, awaited the words of the lawyer who paused a few moments after they came in, before saying:

"I wish to ask if some arrangement cannot be made between you and myself in behalf of Mrs. Grant, whereby she may have a pleasant home here. I need not appeal to your sisterly sympathies, Mrs. Whitney. I simply ask you if Mrs. Grant can have a pleasant home here with you?"

Grant Whitney looked from the window, commenced to whistle, checked himself, and listened to the reply made by his wife.

"Mrs. Grant and I cannot live in one house," she replied.

"Then I suppose I can obtain a certain portion of her husband's property for her?" coolly remarked the lawyer.

"I'd like to know how?" asked Grant Whitney quickly.

"There is many a turn and twist to the law which you do not understand."

"Oh, Christopher! do not have any words with these people. Let us take Frankie and go away from here. They are welcome to all the property," said Mrs. Grant, interrupting her brother.

Mrs. Whitney laughed scornfully.

"I should be sorry to be obliged to prove the character of your fair client, Mr. Mellen," she sneered.

"Give me my child, and let me go away!" cried Mrs. Grant.

"Your child! I did indeed allow him to call you 'mother'; and, to please Major Grant, I promised to allow you to take Frankie a while, but it was because his mind was unsettled and I did not wish to trouble him. You could not have thought me in sober earnest when I consented to humor his mad fancies, by allowing Frankie to remain with you for a day. I give you credit for more sense," sneered Mrs. Whitney.

Heart Trouble Permanently Cured

"An ounce of proof is worth tons of assertions"

163 Henderson Ave., Ottawa.

Dear Sirs:—

"Many years ago I had a shock which left my heart in a very bad state. I have been under a Doctor here in Ottawa and elsewhere, and was told to keep very quiet. Now that is a hard thing for a mother with a large family to do.

I saw your Pills advertised, and to my surprise, after taking these Pills, I felt a different woman. I can hardly believe that I am the same woman, who came through such a trying time on the change of life which I really thought would be a great strain but which was not; on account of the help and benefit derived from your Pills. I really cannot praise them enough."

Yours respectfully,

MRS. A. H. GREENSLADE.

Heart trouble is one of the most dangerous and distressing afflictions and the fact that

DR. BOVEL'S IRON TONIC PILLS have cured many cases prove that beyond a doubt that they are invaluable for all nerve and heart troubles.

Dr. Bovel's Home Remedies are sold by all dealers. Ask for them. If not obtainable through your dealer within a reasonable time, send 25c (in stamps) to us for any article you require.

Why Not be Well and Strong

When weak and run down DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD will help you back to health.

This letter tells of two women who have proven this.

Mrs. D. Stott, Cobourg, Ont., writes: "After recovering from typhoid fever I was left in a very low state of health. I was weak, nervous and not fit to do any work. A friend of mine, Mrs. G. M. Brown, had used DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD and told me that it benefitted her wonderfully. I took courage and began the use of the medicine. After taking the first box I began to feel an improvement in health and now after using four boxes I am completely cured. I now feel like myself once more and believe that I can attribute the cure to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Life is too short to spend weeks or months dragging out a miserable existence of weakness and suffering. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures by forming new rich blood and building up the system. You can depend on it to benefit you. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.
