—The great and only original Eli Perkins will give his lecture on "Philosophy of Wit and Humor" at Victoria Hall on Wednesday evening. The New York Lecture Bureau writes: "This lecture of Eli Perkins has been the sensation of the year. It is full of philosophy, eloquent oratory and startling thoughts, and keeps the audience thinking and screaming with laughter for two hours. It is indescribable."

-The South London fire hall with its —The South London fire hall with its ever flowing stream has become a veritable nightmare to the members of No. 3 Committee. The water in the cellar continues to accumulate and is doing damage to the foundations of the building. The committee recommended that a drain be put in, but this was rejected by the Council. It has since been found necessary to hire a man to pump the water off at short intervals.

—W. G. Brown, of this city, who intends leaving shortly for Colorado, was surprised Friday night at Christ Church by receiving a neat traveling companion and an address from the young people of the church, as a tangible recognition of his past services in the choir and Sunday school work.

—Two boys, Sidney Corbin and James Pearce, were found sleeping in the sulphur bath rooms Friday night, and were given bunks at the police station. They claimed to have arrived here on the Sarnia express, and did not wish to arouse their parents at uch a late hour. The magistrate allowed shem to go.

—The latest toilet arrangement is the invention of a shrewd Yankee, who has concluded that people do not like to use the same soap in hotels and other public places. He has invented a nickel-plated case, which is filled with powdered soap, and, by pressing a button, as much of this as is needed runs down into one's hand.

The Churches Will Unite.

Mr. D. L. Hardey, a member of Queen's Park Church, writes: "I notice in the ADVERTISE of Friday night an article copied from the Guardian of April 15 which is calculated to mislead the public and also to create no little mischief between the two churches interested—Queen's Park and Elizabeth Street. churches interested—Queen's Park and Elizabeth Street. It is true, as the London correspondent states, that a new edifice has not been decided upon, but it is untrue for him to say that union had not been decided or effected, as at the first joint meeting of the two Quarterly boards, Rev. Mr. Hayhurst presiding, the unity of the two churches was adopted unanimously, and subsequently at the regular quarterly meetings of the two Boards (separately) the question of union was ratified. Again, the letter in the Guardian says: 'On the question of invitation proper it must be understood that Queen's Park Quarterly Board is in no way involved.' In refutation of this I will just say that at a meeting of the two boards held in Queen's Park school room and presided over by Rev. Mr. Hayhurst, it was moved by Mr. A. B. Campbell, seconded by myself, that we invite the Rev. Mr. Philp, of Watford, to be the minister for the united church. This motion was carried without a dissenting voice."

"One Who is Interested" also takes exception to the letter and says: "At a meeting of the joint board of the Queen's Park and Elizabeth Street Churches a new church was decided upon, to be called the Centennial Church, and also by the same board it was decided by an almost unanimous vote to invite Rev. J. Philp to be the pastor of the united church for the next conference year. If your correspondent would do more to bring about union instead

"Will I bring in the supper, miss?" inquired Kate Quinn, when Johm Maher's eulogistic description of Dora had filled with a burning curiosity to see her.

"Is it now?" said Miss Nugent. "No,
to be sure ye won't. Don't you see that
Mrs. Lytton didn't change her gown yet?
Will ye come with me, Mrs. Lytton?

Barbara led her across the low wide hall,
almost bare of ornament, and up the wide heavy stairs to her room on the first floor.
The window, shaded by curtains of old blue chintz, was open, and the night air blew in cool and sweet from the lake.

"Oh! how lovely," exclaimed Dora.

"What a great lake! It is as good as living by the sea. And a ruin too! What a beautiful old tower!"

"Ah! ye'll know more of that very soon,"
said Miss Nugent. "That's where me brother's going to put up his grand telescope that you've come to help him with."

"Oh, indeed! Mr. Nugent is quite an THE MILLER EMULSION CO., NEW YORK AND KINGSTON, ONT. Sold by all Druggists.

"Oh! I know them, I know them, the craytures!" exclaimed Anthony. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if I built a quiet little line of me own, from this to Dublin, one o' these days. It's a notion I bave."

"Oh! indeed, it's queer notion ye'll hear in this place, Mrs. Lytton, I can assure."

should imagine so from his advertisement in the newspaper."
This was Dora's first feeler.
"Ardent, is it?" laughed Barbara. "Well then, me dear Mrs. Lytton, I tell ye that ye'll have to teach him the very A B C of it. I don't suppose now that Anthony ever looked through a telescope in his life."
"Capital!" thought Dora. "But very much the case I suppose it to be."
"Oh, how curious," she said to Barbara.
"Then Mr. Nugent wants to—to—"
"My dear," said Miss Nugent, "I don't quite know what he wants, and I'm doubtful if he knows himself. But between ye I hope ye'll arrive at something. Now if hope ye'll arrive at something.

quite know what he wants, and I'm doubtill if he knows himself. But between ye I hope ye'll arrive at something. Now if there's anything ye want don't think twice about asking for it. Dear! but you're young to be a widow, and to have lived alone by yourself in Paris there," and without waiting for Dora's reply, Miss Nugent smiled kindly on her and left her. She popped in again to say, "Come down as soon as you're ready."
"Was anybody ever in a stranger situation?" thought Dora. "If they only knew me! They used to say in Australia that I was like my father. Have my aunt and incle thought that, I wonder? This room might have been his. He must have sat out under those trees, and climbed that tower, and rowed upon the lake there. But there was a son, my cousin, where is he? And my uncle knows nothing of astronomy, and I am here to teach him? I was half inclined to cry a little while ago, but really it is all very funny. This room would make four of Madame Danton's. I wonder how old the furniture is? And they've put me a new wicker chair; papa's money bought that, I suppose. And a brand new chart of the heavens over the chimneypiece, I declare. That was very thoughtful of Uncle Anthony."

Anthony."

Meanwhile she was making a rapid toilette, and that finished she groped her way down the dark staircase to the hall.

"We're in here, Mrs. Lytton," called her aunt, and Dora found her way into the her aunt, and Dora dining-room.

A rater serious shock awaited her here. The first object her eye fell upon on entering the room, was a picture of her father, an old colored photograph in a gitt-edged morocco case, which stood open on the heantelpiece.

It was unmistakably her father, though the features were younged that long remembered them. ather, though the leatures were younged hat Dora remembered them.

Kedagh had had the picture taken in Dublin the day beforehe sailed for Australia and for all Anthony's old bitterness against his brother, he had never let this picture om his sight. Dora's memory of her father was not a
