Whenever I find that the jury is with me, I quit, no matter where it leaves my speech. I've often stopped speaking even before I reached the summing-up point. This may be dangerous to a man's reputation to the "people of God," whereas a great many more of our addresses should be directed to the unsaved.

They are the ones to be writtened by a constant of the Mr. McSweeny believed in winning his case, and spoke to the jury with counsel for the defense in a California murder trial. The case looked hope-less. Not a link was missing in the to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Let us, then, as Christians, try to bring those into the fold no evidence for the defense. Believing that the case was won, the State's remarks in conclusion, and then the great Ohio leader faced the jury to make the concluding argument. He began in a quiet, friendly, con-versational tone, such as one migh use in discussing the weather. No ref erence was made to the murder, even indirectly, but the boyhood of the pris oner was quietly and rapidly sketched

The jurors were deeply interested, and followed the narrative intently. Mr. McSweeny stepped closer. In manner which seemed almost confi-dential, he drew a vivid picture of London, Feb. 20.—Chrisp won from a pretty country cottage, with a door-mith on a foul in last night's prize yard bright with flowers and roses climbing over the porch. Within he showed a faithful and loving wife preparing supper-the table partially set, the teakettle steaming and singing on the stove. On the dooryard gate three ruddy-faced youngsters were swinging and looking up the road to see who should be the first to catch a glimpse of "papa" coming the whole court-room, "Gentlemen, you must send him home to them The effect was electrical. A roar of applause followed, and one old grizzled juror, brushing away a tear, blurted blurted out, "We'll do it, sir, we'll do it!"

Mr. McSweeny instantly stopped and said the lady at the door.
"Yes'm," said the tramp, touching dict of acquittal without leaving their seats.

Foremost among those who pressed forward to congratulate the eloquent Ohioan was the prisoner himself, who, with tears streaming down his cheeks, wrung his counsel's hands, and thanked him again and again. But between his sobs he managed to say:
