to rule a busband is all buncombe; it can't be done. You can coax most men, bribe some, and govern a year few, but that vulcar rub-bing of the fut the right way wint every time.

Here are two interesting little extracts which shed light on the growing power of the press: "M. Carnos has had all the journalists following him in his tour presented to him, and has told them he was anxious to facilitate their work, as he knew the population of all France wheled to be informed correctly as to what took place. He relied, he said, on the journalists for telling the truth. The Prime Minister of Roumania adopted the hitherto unprecedented course of summoning the editors of the present crisis, and appealed to their patrotism and public apprix, requesting them not to publish reports likely to add to the extreme gravity of the present disflection." The President, it seems, requested the editors to tell the truth; the Prime Minister to suppress is, its would be interesting to know which method of mobbing the press proves the more successful.

After the performance Mr. Clay was passing a saloon when he heard a ruction inside and stupped to see what it was all about. There stood the man in the plaid ulster whacking the bar with his first and shouring that he could lick any man who said that it was not a good show or that Rossina Vokes was not the best comedienne on the stage today.

This, of course, astonished Mr. Clay. After a while he saked the man why it was, if the performance was so good, he left when it was half over.

"Why," said the man. "I got so d—d lonesome up there I couldn't stand it." Not Familiar to film.
