An Interesting Story About Old Time Varieties

(Boston Transcript)

The recollections published in this column the other day of the old apple orchard on the farm have been the means of bringing a rare pleasure to the Nomad, for they have inspired M. P. C., C. W. J., and others to seek out and present the writer of the article with For fares, sleeping accommodation apple or apples of every sort named as growing in the old orchard. The apples mentioned were the Fameuse Baldwin, Northern Spy, Golden Russet, Pippin, Rhode Island Greening, Talman Sweet, Spitzenberg saw or heard of the Belleflower was still in existense, but M. P. and C. W. J. have turned it up for him. There was one apple in the old orchard which the Normad forgot in making his enumeration; it was the Seek No Farther. Evidently this apple failed to make a deep impression on the juvenile mind or palate or he would not have omitted it from memory's golden list.
