

public and private, shows that she was one who would have made her mark, and have succeeded in life in whatever circle her lot might have been cast; whether as a country cleric's better half, or as a school-mistress or editress, instead of being the wife of a wealthy politician and peer.

IN THE CHART-ROOM.

She had a knack of management, a supply of tact, and a fund of energy and good nature, which would well endow any woman. She will not easily be forgotten by those who were her friends, and they were legion.

Lady Brassey had been ill before she left Europe for the last time, and it was hoped that a long voyage, such as she so much
