

CANADA AND THE UNITED NATIONS: FACTS AND FIGURES

- Canada's share of the United Nations' regular budget was 3.11% in 1994; in 1995 it dropped slightly to 3.07%. Canada's share of the peacekeeping budget was 3.125% in 1994 and 3.083% in 1995.
- In 1994, Canada contributed $239.1 million to the UN in assessed contributions: $41.7 million to the regular budget, $127.7 million to peacekeeping operations, and $69.7 million to specialized agencies of the UN system.
- The budget for the UN's core functions — the Secretariat operations in New York, Geneva, Vienna, Nairobi, and the five regional commissions — is $1.75 billion. This is less than 2% of the Canadian federal budget.
- Operating expenses for the UN system, including peacekeeping operations, development programs, human rights activities, and environmental initiatives, come to about $24.57 billion a year. This is about the same as the annual revenue of one large Canadian company, Bell Canada Enterprises.
- The core functions of the UN require the services of 9,600 people. This is less than one third of the people employed to run the Government of Saskatchewan.
- About 60,000 people work for the UN system worldwide — including the UN secretariat and some 30 other organizations, such as the United Nation's Children's Fund, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund. About the same number of people are employed at one Canadian company, Northern Telecom.
