

in truth : having the same mind that was in HIM "who went about doing good ;"—a union of all those who with "one heart are striving together for the faith of the Gospel." It is hoped that this truly Christian feature of the Institution—the combination of Christ's people, of whatever evangelical Church—will gather around it many large-hearted and zealous supporters. A Christian fellowship, so often fervently desired, is thus, as in other instances, realized amongst us, and many Soldiers of the Cross, who for years fought single-handed, are now found standing side by side, and in a broad phalanx waging war against the great enemy of souls, "having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."

The design of the Association will be fully seen in the "Objects" and "Rules" which follow.

A Library will be formed, from which sound, useful and religious books may be had, and to which easy access may be obtained, at a charge within the compass of most all. Lectures, at once instructive and calculated to lead the mind to God, will be delivered by persons duly qualified, and invited by the Association, at stated periods, during the winter season. A Reading Room will be open where all useful and solid periodicals may be read: and above all it is humbly hoped that the genial influence of true religion will work its silent way, upon those who may be brought within its reach, testifying to them, that "godliness has the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come."
