ers were also instructed to discover the position on Sunday cars of the absent ones, and of those who remained at the post of duty.

It takes one by surprise to read a list of five and thirty ministers of this town who have left their churches pastorless and have gone off on a holiday, some to the seashore, some to the mountains.

What has become of the religious observance of Sunday in these five and thirty churches? Have five and thirty substitutes been found, or is this great absentee list only an indication that Toronto is moving in the direction of the American plan of shutting up the churches? It the rule that applies to Toronto applies to other cities to the same extent, it is, of course, out of the question that a substitute can be found in all cases, and closing the churches altogether would be the only solution of the difficulty. In New York very many churches are shut up for the summer while the ministers are enjoying themselves in the far-off fields and the people are left to devise such ways and means of godliness and piety as may be available to them in the dog days. The World does not tell us that substitutes have been found in Toronto, and we suppose the reporters would have interviewed the substitutes if they were on the spot.

In any event he question is a proper one: What account is taken of the sick and dying on Sunday or Monday in the thirty-five pastorless parishes? The substitutes cannot very well attend to that. There may be an assistant left behind in some of them to wrestle with the overwork which the hot weather is certain to bring with it. There is more sickness and generally a higher death rate in the great heat of summer. The sick may look for comfort in vain, those who mourn may mourn alone. That may be the idea. And that it is pleasanter to trot off to Europe, to the sea, or to the mountains than to lead the poor people, who in these days of high-priced and classified travel cannot follow their pastor as the multitude followed Jesus, and were fed, when He went over the Sea of Gal

There is food for much grave reflection in this publication of the first of absentee pastors by a newspaper that circulates widely among the people. We believe the adherents of all denominations are taught at least that the worship of God is a duty of religion. What are they to think when the army of pastors, contradicting their preaching, put the annual pursuit of recreation for themsives above the duty which they declare is the property of the contradiction of the state of the property of the contradiction for themsives above the duty which they declare is the property of the contradiction of the contradiction of the state of the property of the contradiction of the cont

In The World's absentee list there is not the name of one Catholic priest. Wherever occasion calls the priest away from his charge the splittual needs of the people must be fully provided for. The stewardship of the sacred priesthood is not a thing that can be suspended for one, two, three or five months of the year.
