(W. D. Nesbit in Chicago Post.) So often we come across a raucous jeer at the ostrich because it sticks its head in the sand and thinks itself invisible. We criticise the ostrich for this because we are a superior species of bipeds.

However, a fat man will jab a little flat hat on his head, strap a belt about his waist, put on tan shees and the rest of his clothes and go prancing down street, thinking he looks thin just because he has seen a thin man in such a rig.

A thin man will put, on a baggy suit, wear a loose collar and a big hat and thinks he looks fifty pounds heavier than he really is.

A woman will stack $90 worth of hair on her head and go grandly through life thinking that everybody believes it to be her own.

her own.

A man with six cents net cash in his jeans will grow side whiskers like Commodore Vanderbilt wore; talk wisely about what Pierpont Morgan is up to and think he is taken for a capitalist.

A politician will invest in a $4 silk hat and a long-tailed coat, wear a black string tie and a collar that gives his Adam's apple full play and will strut from platform to platform orating about the destiny of the country and believes in his heart that the people are on the verge of electing him to office.

Unless cured early in life a man will allow his hair to grow long and get frizzly and will then attack either the violin or piano upon the least provocation and
