According to a recent issue of the So-Called Reform Associations on Shanghai Mercury, early last month resilents in Shanghai were startled by the sound of a loud explosion, followed by a series of lesser reports, coming from the direction of the Kiangnan arsenal, and in some parts of the settlement the reflection of what was evidently a considerable conflagration was seen. On Surday morning it was learned that the alarming sounds were caused by an explosion in a powder magazine at Loonghan,

The Kobe Herald of the 3rd instant, contains an extract from a letter by a well known gentleman of Shanghai, who underwent the trials of the siege. The writer says they had a terribly hard time especially during the last day or two before the relieving troops arrived. The Bengal Lancers, he says, were the first to reach the legation, and the feelings of the beleagured garrison and civilians can better be imagined when they beheld the welcome sight of the dusky warriors in khaki. The Chinese did their best to wipe out the defenders the last day of the siege, and it was hard work keeping them back. The writer has had enough of fighting to last him his life-time, and did his full share of the work, in the trenches and on sentry The duty ever since the siege began.

Died at St. Char'es Street Residence

At the residence of a brother on St.

This Morning.

Charles street, Joseph Wilson, a member of the firm of W. and J. Wilson, clothiers, Government street, breathed his last at 10 o'clock this morning. In his death Victoria lost an old resident, a man highly connected and respected by everyone with whom he came in contact, either in a social or a business way.

He continued in active business life until about two years ago. At that time he was out rowing when in some way he strained a heart valve. Complications set in and he never recovered his health. About a year ago he went to California and remained there for several months; but the climate proved of no benefit in his case, and he returned to the home, where he breathed his last this morning.

The pioneers in business here were all friends of the deceased, and deeply regret his death. He leaves many rela-ives in the city. He was a single man. Arrangements for the funeral have not et been announced.
