How Grandpa Gray Fixed Up a Surprise
For Young Industry.
"I am going to try 'em," said Grandpa
Gray, and his eyes were twinkling. He meant his three small grandsons— Hal, Herbie and Had. So at dinner grandpa said to grandma:
"I wish I had time to take that rock out of the yard there. It's a real eyesore to BLOOD MAKER or the yard there. It's a real eyesore to me."

"Can't we, grandpa?" asked the boys.

"Well, yes, if you want to," said he,
"and I'll be much obliged to you."

So, directly after dinner, they set to work. It didn't look like a very large rock. But it was a good deal larger than it looked really.

"Pooh!" said Herbie. "I'll take it out in no time!" And he got a stout stick and tried to pry up the rock. But the stick broke, and Herbie got a fall, from which he jumped up red and angry.

"Mean old thing!" said he, and he put his hands in his pockets and watched Hal and Had tug at it until their faces were red too.

Then all three lifted together, but it wasn'ts a mite of use.

"Let's get the hoe!" said Had.

"And the littlest crowbar!" said Hal.

"And the shove!" said Herbie.

So Had hoed around it, and Herbie shoveled, and Hal pushed the crowbar under the rock and bore down on it with all his might. The afternoon was very warm, and the three little scarlet faces needed a great deal of mopping. But the boys wouldn't give it up. and the average visitor will find, when he once falls under its spell, that it will linger with him with surprising

No doubt there was some such inspira-tion behind the lines: give it up.
"Poor little fellows!" said grandma "Poor little fellows!" said grandma, looking out through the vines.
But just then a great shout announced that the work was done. And there—there where the rock had lain—were four silver dimes, one apiece and one for good luck!

"Hurrah for grandpa!" cheered the boys, and at that very minute grandpa walked out of the house.

"Pretty well done!" said he, giving each little head a pat as he came to it. "Pretty—well—done!"

well—done!"
And now the boys are anxious to dig out another rock, but grandpa thinks maybe silver dimer won't grow under the next one.—Little Sower.

He Was Too Friendly.

A Good Game For Fun.

"Who's got the whistle?" is a game with no end of fun in it. Most of the party—at least all who do not know the game—should be excluded from the room where the fun is going on. Blindfold one of the girls or boys who haven't learned the trick and place him in the center of a circle, in which all the other players are sitting, just as if "hunt the slipper" were to be played. While the blindfolding is in progress let some person slip up quietly and tie the whistle by a long string to some part of the dress of the blindfolded one. The game consists in getting hold of the whistle and blowing it while the blindfolded player tries to guess who has it. Of course he has the whistle himself, and until he discovers the trick the fun runs high. When he has found the whistle, another player can be called into the room and blindfolded and the trick played again.

A Boy and His Mother, Many a boy fails to rise from his chair when his mother enters the room, while he would get up at once if a stranger entered, and one would suppose that his mother, who is more to him than the rest of womankind put together, should, to say the least, have from him the same marks of courteer as strangers. In fact, other woman—with perhaps one exception —will ever do, so he ought in return to treat her as his most valuable possession.

bearing toward her are never thrown lightful fellows I know in New York has never been inside of a theatre, although he is thirty-five years of age. Nor has he ever danced or played cards. He was a personal friend for ten years before I knew that his religious principles precluded his indulgence in these amusements. His secret is that he does not carry his convictions on his sleeve for everyther. on his sleeve for everybody to rub against. And of his popularity with women, young and mature, I can assure you absolutely. He reads about the new plays, and can, therefore, talk about them if they come up in conversation. If asked if he has seen a certain actor or play he merely replies in sation. If asked if he has seen a certain actor or play he merely replies in the negative. Never does he force his convictions upon others. A young man's popularity with either sex rests upon something more than his forms of amusement: amiability of manner, kindliness, a pleasant address, a manly outlook on life, honorable principles—all these go far toward insuring room.
