LINES,

Respectfully Dedicated to the LOYAL ORANGEMEN of New Brunswick.

BY MENAPIA.

Before the triumphant note on high,
Let its echo reach the sky,—
"Sons of WILLIAM live to die!
For a glorious Victory!"
The Foeman Proud and Ruthless Foe,
Trembles while them shout they hear:
Strike direct accurate on their ear,—
"Live but for a Victory!"

As at old our Patriot led
Us to fields whereon he bled,
While triumph o'er our Banner shed,
The halo of a Victory!
So we on Brunswick's glorious plain,
Raise those stories o'er again,
While not a tear drop falls to stain
The beauty of that Victory!

Hoist the scarlet Banner high,
Fronds on each breeze, Oh, let it fly,
It spreads the "glorious memory"
Of our Victory!

Then on this glorious, happy morn,
Plunge your cups into the Bowl,
Toast with spirit; drink and sing
Our Ransoms revelry!
See the flame of Smithfield blaze!
Hear the Papal Foeman Banner raise!
But No! No Bigotry here sways
Our ever glorious tenantry.

Vainly may they try to lull
Our hatred to the King "Bull"—
Would have OUR ENGLAND turn a school,
For spreading wicked Popery!
No! no! those powers we now defy—
Maintain MANLY AND RATHER DIE,
Than see that dastard Banner fly
O'er our English Yeomanry!

Then while we think of WILLIAM'S "Jerry"—
O'er the BOYNE—drink deep and merry,
A bumper toast—"THE HEROES OF DERRY,"
And triumphant Victory!
Hail them Our Constitution mender!
Hail! Hail! OUR CHAMPION AND DEFENDER!
We catch the shout of NO SURRENDER!"
To a dosting Papistry!

And while we list to Symbol ringers,
And while the echo round us lingers,
Seraphs with angelic fingers,
On our Anniversary!
Wreathe a glorious chaplet green,
Mixed with Orange—onward bring,
And while you crown HER, lauding sing,
GOD SAVE OUR GRACIOUS, NOBLE QUEEN!
Though many an Anniversary!

LAVINIA.

She was a gentle, quiet girl,
With darkly waving hair,
Just parted in her simple way,
On a forehead low and fair.
No flush of brilliant loveliness
Was sparkling on her face,
But something tranquil and subdued,
And touching in its grace.

She seldom smiled; but then she brought
No cloud on other's glee;
And down on her pale young brow,
A shadow seem'd to be.
And then her voice was very sad
In its soft and earnest tone,
With its pure and winning eloquence,
And it's sweetness all its own.

Some hidden sorrow on the past
Its darkness seemed to throw;
Some tale we spoke of early ties,
Of treasures long ago.
But in the daily, common cares,
She calmly met her share,
As one who had no shrinking from
The trials life must bear.

No tear was on her placid lip,
Where kindest accents hung,
And never now the careless lip
From her still spirit sprung.
But with a sigh and silent step,
She moves among the throng.
Promoting in her noiseless way,
The cheerful dance and throng.

She had a pleasure in the sight
Of other's happy mirth,
Such as an angel might have felt
While looking on the earth;
For she was like an angel here,
So lowly and so pure,
And this hath pass'd where spirits are,
To dwell with us no more.

We miss the kindness of her voice,
And the beauty of her brow;
And the sweetest words we ever heard
Are silent to us now.
She never spoke the quiet grief,
Whose blight so early fell—
She had been gayer once, they said,
But loved too long and well.
