with the care received that Lord Dundonald, commander-in-chief of the militia in Camada, with his aide-de-camp, will arrive in the city in a special car attached to the 8 clock train on Saturday evening next, and, will spend Sunday in the city.

Owing to the exceptionally large entry list for the exhibition, the excentive have found it necessary to make a large addition to their already large number of sheep and cattle pens. The work is proceeding very satisfactorily, and when completed it is hoped that there will be ample room for all exhibitors of stock.

The death of David Hatt occurred this morning, and the news was heard with universal regret. Mr. Hatt, who was born in this city in 1842, is survived by his wife, daughter of the late Bichard Estey, and one son and two daughters, Fred. P. Hatt, who is in the employ of the Eastern Steamship Company; Mr. Harold R. Babbirt, and Mis Kathleen Hatt. Charles H. Hatt, so welk known in connection with the Gibson cotton mile, is the last surviving brother. The sisters of deceased are Mrs. Dr. N. R. Colter, of St. John; Mrs. J. J. Weddall, Miss Hatt, Mrs. F. S. Williams, of Murrysville, and Mrs. Dr. Toryens. The funeral of Mr. Hatt, who is in the range of the course of the arms of the course of the c

Capt. James Howe, of Stanley, arrived in the city yesterday on his way to Susex with his company, which this year he was only able to recruit up to a strength of five. In fact, it was next to impossible to enlist men in the country at this time of the year when all, or nearly all are busy in the harvest field at good pay.

Those who are not harvesting have gone pany of more than twenty men, Captain Howe was compelled to come with five, and will be attached to some other company. The same difficulty was experienced in the other companies, men who were not working refusing to go for the small remuneration of 50c area day saying that remuneration of 50c. per day, saying they would rather stay for the exhibition. Captain McLeod was the most fortunate, for by dint of hard work he managed to entries in the live stock and indland, in Portland Methodist church, Thursday evening, Rev. Mr. Whitemarsh spoke of the fishermen as follows:

WITH THE DEEP SEA FISHER LADS.

Rev. Mr. Whitemarsh, in Rortland Methodist Church, Talked Entertainingly of the Newfoundland Industry.

"The cod fishing is to Newfoundlend what the farming industry is to Carnada. The Canadian meets his brother Canadian and inquires 'How are the crops?' The Newfoundlander meets his brother Newfoundlander and asks 'How are the fish.'

"The fishing begins in June, and ends as a general thing in November.

"From 3 o'clock and 2.30 in the morning to 10 et night if any fish is caught, and a fire on, a kettle of water boiling, and breakfast ready.

"The meal usually consists of tea or coffee and hard tack, or bread, sometimes a piece of fat pork is added as a kind of relish. Then the fisher dresses himself in his ollekine, if the morning is wet, puts on his Cape Ann or sou wester, pulls on his sea boots, steps out into the cold, crisp morning, and is soon on board his 'smack,' as the little boat is called on which he labors.

"Arrived on the fishing grounds, the

which he labors.

"Arrived on the fishing grounds, the grapnel is thrown overhoard just where it is needed, and the boat swings at anchor. The hook and line are then got ready. The hook made of iron, plated with galvanized material, and about five fect from the hook is a large piece of lead to sink the baited deceiver to the

"Often the fisherman uses two lines, one on each side of his boat, so that if fish on each side of his boat, so that h had are plentiful there may be no time lost.

"Presently the fish at the other end nibbles; then a short, quick pluck is made, and the catch is pulled to the surface. I would like to say here, from personal experience that a nibble is a most exciting thing. You are on the 'quirying' at once Rome, you land your struggling victim at the bottom of the boat, and hurry the hook over the side for another.

"That one has whetted your appetite. If fishing is brisk, there are few things."

The fish cut open and beheaded is then assent on to the splatter, who seizes it, and in a short time, with his sharp knife, cuts out the bone and lays the fish flat on the table. It is now ready for the salter, who stows it with other fish in a corner of the room and throws the necessary amount of salt upon it. There is a great art in salting fish. You must not put on too much or too little, and the position of salter is a very important and responsible one. The fish remain where they have been cast for a week or more, and are then given into the hands of the fishermen's wives and grown-up daughters. They thoroughly wasil every fish, and lay it on the flake to dry, and watch day after day until it is well dried; no rain must fall on it in process of drying and it is a most anteresting sight it times to see a bevy of shermen's wives running to to the flake to take up the fish and so preserve it from the rain.

"Then comes the squid season. The squid closely resembles the octopus, only much smaller. It has eight or ten tentacles on its head, and by these, when plentiful it is caught in large numbers.

"Then last of all comes the herring season and for the remainder of the fall salted squid and herring are used. Occasionally, in some parts of the island, there is a winter fishing, but it is very severe. The fish die, ere they reach the surface, so cold is it.

ishing is also of much importance. Great and strong vessels with large crews sail out to the banks hundreds of miles from land, bait long trawl lines, catch fish and bring them home.
