siring to develop its agricultural resources or where farm tenancy has become a menace in its body politic, cannot go very far wrong in recognizing the social and political significance of these problems and in endeavoring to solve them through the use of its credit and taxing power. I am not altogether convinced that state action is indispensable or that it is even the best or most practicable solution of this vital—and, in the last analysis, national problem. Apart from any political consideration, the states where the problem is the most acute are the least likely to deal with it on rational business lines, and it is on business lines alone that the problem can be satisfactorily dealt with.

In a loan aggregating $2,065,391 made through the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society, the total losses amounted to $64,217. This indicates that our insolvent farmers are not so insolvent as they appear, as is shown by the way they meet their obligations. Just think! This is what is accomplished with farmers who were not only insolvent financially, but agriculturally as well. What, therefore, could not be accomplished with our army of indigenous tenant farmers, inspired by a new independence and a new hope? And what could not be accomplished with some of the best European farming material right in our midst if given a chance of land ownership, which to them is the emblem of nobility? While wrestling with our own difficulties and solving our own problems, I have often wondered why American philanthropy, American statesmanship, American enlightened self-interest, has so long overlooked a field of activity so pregnant with good, so fruitful in results and yet so consonant with sound business and financial principles.

What is needed is a national organization—call it if you will, the Agrarian Bank of America—that will perform on a nation-wide scale the same functions the Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society is performing for the Jewish immigrant.

It is not my intention here nor is this the time or place to enter into details of the organization of such a Bank, but what I have attempted to show is that the insolvent farmer is to all intents and purposes in no better position to-day than he ever was. I have endeavored to set forth the essential principles of the problem. I firmly believe that there is enough vision and imagination and enough public spirit and enlightened self-interest in this country to solve the problem of the insolvent farmer along rational business lines.

I hope you will not think I am a back to the soiler. I am not. I do not believe there is any greater virtue in making two blades of grass grow where formerly there grew but one, than in building two automobiles where formerly there was but one. Besides, the automobile has been the greatest single influence in farming of all time. I am not especially interested in the reclamation of the desert, the swamp or the abandoned farm. I am more interested in the human factor engaged in the work of reclamation. I am not nearly as much interested in increased agricultural production as in the agricultural producer.—Farmer's Advocate, Winnipeg.

Gossip.

Plaster Hill Shorthorns.

Messrs. F. Martindale & Son, of Caledonia, Ontario, report that their Plaster Hill herd of dual-purpose Shorthorns are doing real well. They have sold all the bulls of serviceable age at present, and report the following recent sales: One bull to George A. Hodge, Cookshire, Que.; one bull to Isaac Leach & Son, Thessalon, Que., and one bull to Angus Holstein, Caledonia, Ont. Messrs. Martindale report that their herd consists of big dual-purpose cows milking around 40 to 60 pounds per day, the kind that are profitable. They have a few heifers coming on which they will dispose of. They are due to calve this fall to the stock bull Butterfly Champion, a son of Butterfly King 19th, which has qualified with the four daughters in the official R. O. P., and a grandson of that grand old bull, Butterfly King (imp.). This bull is bred from a family of high-testing cows whose butterfat tests range from 4 to 5 per cent. Parties wanting something in dual-purpose Shorthorns should write to F. Martindale & Son, Caledonia.
