SNIPING OFFICERS. A great proportion of officer losses the French and English forces in the Dardanelles are due to the ac-tivity of the Turkish snipers, who have special instructions to pick out the officers. A correspondent with the rrench force writes: "The danger to officers in this part of the peninsula from snipers is very great. Parties of ten or twenty Turkish sharpshooters crawl past our lines at night and either hide in a tree or get into an abandoned trench or shell hole. There they lie concealed from view, waiting for an opportunity to snipe at some isolated officer passing within range of their rifle.
