LAND OF EVANGELINE.

A Land With a History That is Yet Precious. Materially and Otherwise—Some Comparisons.

Happy is the land that has no history is a saying that can scarcely be said to apply to any country for an indefinite length of time. The land of Evangeline has certainly all the appearance at this day of a large share of prosperity, material and otherwise. There is, perhaps, no more fertile tract of country on the continent than the Annapolis Valley. The diked farms, where the owners have the opportunity of shutting out or admitting at will in periods of drouth the tides of the sea, never lack for moisture. The old-fashioned manner of building the dikes, which were used by the primitive inhabitants of this productive valley, are still in use by the farmers of the Annapolis country. They have not been able to invent anything superior for repelling the invasion of the sea. The mud and turf walls are still as serviceable for the purpose as they were 250 years ago. In England there was experiment at an immense expense to keep out the tides by building a wall of wooden spiles. The experiment was unsuccessful. It was found that the water got under the timbers and raised them, and the old-fashioned system, as seen round the Basin of Mines, and other points in the Annapolis Valley, was resorted to. A recent party from Ontario, and H. H. S. writes that they visited the Evangeline well, and the row of guarded willows, of which Charles G. D. Roberts writes, "whose branches perchance tell over to the young leaves of each recurring spring what they saw of Evangeline and her sorrow." Near this spot were unearthed not very long ago some blacksmith's tools which some were ready enough to connect with the site of the old blacksmith's shop; and also there were discovered the foundations of a good-sized building which, it is conjectured, may have been the site of the Mass house where the Acadians were kept in confinement before they were placed on the ships to be taken out of their country. The tourist through the land of Evangeline is bombarded with clouds of Evangeline literature, good, bad and indifferent. Bushels of mawkish rubbish have been written on the great incident in the history of Grand Pre, much of it is very bad verse, and a remarkable feature about the local literature is the small amount of attention paid by the writers to the romantic and artistic story of Louisbourg, while the amateurish efforts of some of the poorer verse-makers are liberally quoted. On the other hand, those who have been fascinated by the chapters which Parkman devotes in simple but strong English to the tale of this unpatric and unhappy people, are struck with the similarity between the work of this great historian and some of the literature of the locality. If there has ever been any doubt as to where Parkman obtained his data, perusal of this local literature should at once remove it. Far the most ably written description of the land of Evangeline which the party came across in their travels was the exceedingly bright and clever little work of Mr. Roberts. By a drive of fourteen miles from Kentville to Wolfville, the tourist reaches Look-off Mountain, where there is obtained a view of rare grandeur over the Minas Basin, the Annapolis and Gasperow Valley, the bold outlines of Blomidon Promontory, the Village of Canning, Grand Pre, and other small settlements in the distance. The whole country is beautifully and highly cultivated, and seen from the Look-off tower, the distant fields, carpeted with golden grain, or dotted with apple orchards, comfortable farm dwellings and barns, clumps of trees, the whole threaded by a silvery river, and pierced with numerous bays glistening in the sunlight, make a delightful panorama.

Faith in the Colonies.

A suggestive fact disclosed by the literature of the day is the faith of English writers in the future of Canada and Australia. This is strongly brought out in an important book by Benjamin Kidd on "The Principles of Western Civilization." It lays stress upon the paramount importance of the western commonwealths in determining the trend of future progress.

Another Englishman, who is equally impressed with the energy of the English-speaking race outside England, is Archibald R. Colquhoun, whose "Mastery of the Pacific" will be published by Heinemann in London soon. The proof sheets reveal a deliberate attempt to prove that the Pacific has become as important, as the Mediterranean was in ancient times, or as the Atlantic became after the voyages of Columbus and the wars between England and France for the control of the New World. The book has chapters on the marvelous possibilities of Canada, Japanese progress, the Dutch empire in the Far East, and the development of German enterprise in China and the South Seas.

University Ideals.

In his lecture at Toronto University a recent Saturday afternoon, Prof. Halliday Douglas, of Knox College, speaking on "University Ideals," dealt with the three aspects of a university, first as the field of mental training, second the atmosphere and fellowship in which the student rounded down his corners, and third, its national significance. Graphic pictures were given of the Scottish University life as well as of English universities, and the university life of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Professor Douglas argued that what Canada needs is a combination of the inspiration of Scottish universities, with the thoroughness and residential features of the English institution, as well as a liberal supply of money. The university, he thought, should provide brilliant men with the means and leisure to work out their theories.

FIVE DOCTORS CRIED "HOPELESS"

But Jacob DeWitt wasn't going to cry quite without a fight for his life. He pinned his faith to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, and it saved him.

Jacob DeWitt, of Hay Island, had been under treatment with five doctors. Each in turn giving up his case as a hopeless case of heart trouble, said he might drop dead any minute. He fell in weight from 214 to 143 pounds, but he "pinned his faith" to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, and he declares he owes his life to it. From the first dose he found benefit. To-day says he never felt better in his life.

Gentlemen—After suffering for seven years with inflammatory rheumatism, so bad that I was eleven months confined to my room, and for two years could not dress myself without help. Your agent gave me a bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT in May, '97, and asked me to try it, which I did, and was so well pleased with the results I procured more. Five bottles completely cured me and I have had no return of the pain for eighteen months.

The above facts are well known to everybody in this village and neighborhood.

A HELPLESS CHILD.

A weak and puny child is badly handicapped in the battle of life. It is isolated from the healthy enjoyments of its little fellow-beings. It cannot partake either of their play or their sorrow. It is a burden to its parents, and a source of grief to the world; its whole life is embittered by incapacity and weakness.

MARITIME EXPRESSIONS.

Used in a Metaphorical Sense, They Are Quite Common.

Maritime expressions, used metaphorically, are, in fact, very common. We say a couple are "spliced," a young man is the "mainstay" of his family, an intruder "puts his oar in," the member from Wayback "steers through," a man is "hard up," sometimes "taken aback" or has "the wind taken out of his sails," a toper is "slewed," a loafer "spins a yarn," sometimes "tries the other tack," and a ruler "steers the ship of state" through troublesome times.

This last metaphor is extremely ancient, by the way. Horace refers to Rome as a ship at sea, and Plutarch says the Delphic oracle referred to Athens in the same way. A Tascil, saying embodies a like metaphor. "The soul is the ship, reason is the helm, the oars are the soul's thoughts, and truth is the port." An old collection of English proverbs contains this one: "The tongue is the rudder of our ship." Malay maxim says, "The boat which is swamped at sea may be bailed out, but the shipwreck of the affections is final."

Aristophanes, Plautus and others use an expression which comes down to us as an English saw, "To row one way and look another." An old English proverb (1614) was, "It is not good to have an oar in every one's boat."—United Service.

"Lifting the King."

One of the picturesque English coronation ceremonies which have been discontinued is that of lifting the king. In the old days the monarch always slept at the palace of Westminster on the night before the coronation. The regalia, which are still, technically speaking, in the dean and chapter of Westminster, were brought by them to Westminster hall in preparation for the ceremony. These were arranged on a long table, the crown, the scepter, the spurs, and so on. The king when he descended from the palace to Westminster hall was lifted by his nobles on to a marble chair.

The lifting of the king into this chair was a survival of the old Saxon custom of carrying the king on his shield. The custom survived up to the time of the coronation of George IV. When the monarch was seated in the chair, he at once directed by pointing his finger which of his nobles should carry the various parts of the regalia to the abbey, and the procession began.—London Tatler.

Why He Was Rejected.

The soul of a rajah who had been released from the cares of this world and an uncongenial wife presented himself at the gates of paradise.

"Have you been in purgatory yet?" demanded Brahma.

"No, but I have been married."

"Enter then. It is the same thing." At this moment another soul arrived, who begged Brahma to allow him also to enter.

"Softly, softly. Have you been in purgatory yet?"

"No, but neither has that other fellow. He died the same day I did."

"Very true, but he had been married."

"Married, indeed! Why, I have been married three times."

"Away, then, to the lower regions!" said Brahma sternly. "Paradise is not made for imbeciles."

A Man's Success.

Ever think what "success" in life means to a man? That he work like a dog as long as he lives and send his wife abroad and his children away to school. Then when he dies he must leave a competence for his "loved ones," in order that they may continue to live without work. Ever hear of a man's loved ones being criticised for failure to do their duty toward him? But from the time the boy is eight years old to the time the man is tottering with old age he never picks up a book, newspaper or magazine without seeing something with reference to his duty. But did you ever hear of any one owing a duty to man or boy?

A Wasp's Nest.

The female wasp spends the winter in a torpid condition, and when spring arrives she hunts up some sort of sheltered spot appropriate for a nest. Having selected the retreat, she proceeds to lay within it the foundation of a home. For this object earth will not serve her turn. The substance of which the walls and chambers of the house are to be composed must be none other than the finest paper, made of wood pulp, mixed with a sort of sizing, worked to a paste and finely spread in sheets.

Brief Naval Message.

One of the briefest naval dispatches ever penned was Captain Walton's message to his chief, Admiral Byng, after the defeat of the Spanish fleet off Cape Passaro in 1718, and it ran thus:

Sir—I have taken and burnt as per margin, going for Syracuse, and am, sir, your obedient servant. J. WALTON.
