The first big social function to be held in the new armories, a complimentary ball given by the officers of the Thirtieth and Ninety-First Regiments, last evening, for the friends of both, was a brilliant affair. Fully four hundred couples were present. At 8.30 a reception was held in the Ninety-First Officers' mess rooms and the guests were received by Lt-Col. E. E. W. Moore and Mrs. Atkinson; Lieut-Col. and Mrs. Logie; Lieut-Col. Bruce and Mrs. Bruce.

The guests assembled in the Ninety-First lobby and marched to the ballroom, which included the Thirtieth Officers' Mess and lecture room, a special platform being installed between the officers' quarters and the lecture hall for the occasion. The dancing began at 10 o'clock. The ballroom of both officers were filled with different trophies in the regiments, while the decorations in the lecture hall were tastefully arranged flags, with a sprinkling of Japanese wisteria and pink roses. The palms formed a background where the musicians played.

Supper was served continuously throughout the evening in the Thirtieth and Ninety-First rathskellers in the basement. Crawford was caterer. The arrangements for receiving the guests as they arrived were perfect. The carriages drove into the centre of the big hall through the north door and left by the south entrance.

There were numerous cosy corners, nicely decorated throughout the place and these were occupied during the evening. The new armories were inspected by the guests.

The ball room presented a picturesque scene with the officers in their brilliant uniforms and fashionably dressed women flitting about.

The members of the committee in charge were as follows:
