FIGHTING AT CLOSE QUARTERS.

LONDON, July 11. After last night's assault the British remain in possession of Contal-maison, holding it against German counter-attacks and shell fighting. The British, bombing their way forward, gained considerably in Mame Wood. The infantry is at such close quarters in the woods that guns on either side are not firing at the first line, for fear of hitting their own men. The farm at this point was narded by a whole series of barbed ire entrenchments, and defended by mortars, machine guns, automatic rifles and bomb-throwers. Twice the assaulting forces penetrated the farm, and thrice they were thrown back. When they got into the farm itself it was to find themselves in front of a number of machine guns. A furious hand-to-hand combat followed, ending n a victory for the French. The exent to which the Hill was fortified can be judged by the fact that at one earthwork, half way up the slope, 11 mitrailleuses in working order were captured, while two others had been

As mentioned in the official communication we are on the west bank of the Stokod and on either side of the Royno-Kovel railroad. Further left of this widening circle the battle line is beyond Lutsk, and the Russians are launching sledge-hammer blows in the vicinity of Liselin and Zublino, before Vladimir Volynski. The unexpected Russian advance north of the Kovol Sarny railway carried the Russian line to the Stokod river, which has been crossed at several points in spite of the best defence the Germans are able to offer. At present writing, according to the military oritics, there now remain no more natural barriers between the Russian lines and Kovel, in the shape of rivers and swamps. It is predicted that early news may be expected of assaults upon the recently constructed German fortifications before Kovel.
