MADAME'S WARD

BY PAULINE BEVERLY.

"He hasn't, if I fall fond of him again," was the fierce retort. "I can't promise him that! I tell you what, Ned—it's a bad thing that the days are over when men settled their differences by force, and it was death to one of the other."

"Taking all things into consideration, I did not think it was, but then I did not labor under the disadvantage of being made in love and furiously jealous at one and the same time. I only said."

"Well, if any lady won't put herself in the way of another's happiness, I hope for goodness' sake don't do that! You don't know what it might lead to."

"If I thought it would lead to breaking his neck, I don't know what I might not do. As it is, all I say is, let him keep out of my way for his own sake. I shall be a couple of hundred miles away by this time next week—that's one good thing for him. Don't look so blue, Ned. I might have thought him just now, and didn't. There, good-night! I'm best in my own company at present."

He shook his head and was off down the lane at a rapid pace. Before the words were well out of his mouth, she was too new to me in this fierce temper for me to follow him, and had I done so I felt certain that I should have got nothing more satisfactory out of him. But I did wish heartily that he had never had that unhappy encounter with Fraser Froude. After all, I thought, turning toward home again when he was out of sight, if he would be better if he did go away from Whitford for awhile, until the first fierceness of his love and disappointment had passed off, I waited for a few moments to over the church clock ring out ten, slow, sharp strokes, and then, wondering if Madame had missed me, hurried toward the little gate in the park fence by which I had got out more than two hours before.

It stood wide open, and I stared in astonishment, feeling certain as I did that I had closed and latched it behind me. Now here it was swinging back as far as its hinges would let it go. Puzzled, I turned to the narrow foot alley, thinking of the night when I had found poor Victor crouched behind the bushes, and had laughingly accused her of having just said goodbye to her sweetheart. Perhaps, to-night, there were some real reasons, and I should stumble upon a bona fide farewell scene presently. But, although this thought occurred to me, it did not prepare me for what my eyes encountered as I turned into the Lady's Walk.

Who was it that was standing not a score of yards in front of me? Madam Valentin in her black silk dinner-dress, a white woolen shawl framing her pale face and smooth dark hair? Yes, it was she, plain enough, but who was it that was standing beside her, drawn back as she was into the shadow? I rubbed my eyes and looked again. Somewhere I had seen that tall spare figure with the dark black fringe over the shoulder. Somewhere, too, I had seen that foreign-looking swarthy face, the thick ragged mustache, the large intensely black eyes, and that red repulsive-looking scar, running obliquely across the forehead which the moonlight revealed so plainly. Yes—some of these things were strange to me, but when and where had I seen them before?

The remembrance which I wanted came back to me in a flash. I recalled the evening of Ned's accident, when there had been that pretty love scene which Madame had interrupted in old Wilde's kitchen, and how afterward in my slushy walk home, this figure had come bursting through the hedge at my feet. It was the same man—I felt absolutely certain of that. True, I had caught only a moonlight glimpse of him then, just as now; but that made no difference. I would have sworn that the man now standing in the Lady's Walk, holding mademoiselle's hand in his as he stooped to tend to impart to me—that was certain—for she hurried on at a rapid pace, keeping her mouth determinedly shut until we reached the house. Indeed she said only a short good-night then, and passing straight across the hall, went upstairs.

After a moment's hesitation, I went up after her. Most likely Madame was with Ned still, and there were two things I wanted to speak to her about—first, to ask what news Blake had brought, and, secondly, to tell her of that strange rendezvous in the Lady's Walk.

The door of Ned's sitting-room stood ajar when I reached it, and I tapped and went in. There was not much light but that of the fire, and it was not until I took a second glance that I made out the little figure. Ned was lying on the rug, sobbing violently, with his face buried in the cushion on which he had reared. For a moment I hesitated, wondering if it would not be better to steal away without letting her know; then I bent down over her.

"Ned, I say, don't cry like that—there's a good girl! You will be ill, you know."

But she only stretched out one hand to me in a curious helpless way, and her sobs redoubled. I waited for an instant, and then lifted her to her feet. "What is it, Ned? Has anything upset you—anything fresh?"

"No, no—it's nothing," she faltered, trying to quiet herself.

"Oh, come, that's nonsense! Has Madame been upsetting you? No?"—as she made a movement of dissent. "Is it about the diamonds?"

"No, no!" She made a peevish gesture of dissent. "What do I care about them? I don't care if I never see them again!"

And I very much believed that she did not for ever since the robbery she had been singularly apathetic about it.

She had clasped her hands round my arm in her favorite fashion as we stood side by side, and I noticed something that made my heart leap. Fraser Froude's big diamond ring was gone from her finger. Her eyes met mine at the same instant, and she flushed at a hot red.

"Ned, have you taken it off?"

"Yes," she answered with a shiver "I could not bear it on. The sight of it made me turn faint."

"I can well believe it," I said. "She burst into tears again, crying quickly this time, with her curly head resting against my arm. Presently I whispered in her ear—

"Ned, you are tired of this, aren't you?"

"Tired," she echoed. "Oh, Ned, I wish I were dead—I do indeed!"

DESERTED AT COAST

Two Hamilton Girls Wind Up in L/s Angeles' Home of Detention.

[Associated Press.]

Los Angeles, Jan. 10.—The detention home ended a sight-seeing trip of two young Canadian girls from Hamilton, Ont., who during their stay here were the guests of a man who bought $10,000 worth of "joy rides" and champagne in a month. The girls are Stella and Ruth Smith, aged 17 and 15. They were arrested last night with two men who are now in the city prison facing statutory charges. The girls told the police they came here under the protection of a friend of their father, and that this friend had inherited a small fortune. The fortune lasted just thirty days. They then disappeared leaving the girls penniless and at the mercy, according to their story, of the men arrested with them.

Sales Doubling Every Six Months

WONDERFUL DEMAND FOR A WONDERFUL REMEDY.

During the past few years, the sales of "Fruit-a-tives" have doubled every six months. For the six months from January to July of this year, the sales of this popular medicine were more than twice greater than for any similar period since "Fruit-a-tives" was introduced to the public.

"The National Drug and Chemical Company of Canada, Limited, the largest wholesale drug house in the world—Lyman, Limited, of Montreal—and Lyman Brothers, of Toronto—are buying 'Fruit-a-tives' in quantities of 100 gross lots. One hundred gross mean 14,400 boxes, which retail for $7,200. This gives some idea of the steady demand for these wonderful fruit liver tablets.

"It is safe to say that 'Fruit-a-tives' is on sale in every drug store and in departmental stores and general stores carrying medicines throughout the Dominion. Nor is the sale of 'Fruit-a-tives' confined to Canada. In many parts of the United States, 'Fruit-a-tives' is the standard family medicine and hardly a day passes that it is not being ordered by mail.

"Fifty cents a box, six for $2.50, or trial box 25 cents. If your dealer does not handle them, any quantity will be posted on order. Price, by Fruit-a-tives, Limited, Ottawa.

MAY ABANDON ST. LAWRENCE ROUTE

White Star Line Cannot Compete With Allan Line Without a Subsidy.

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—Unless the government will grant a subsidy to the White Star Line for the steamers Laurentic and Megantic, which were placed upon the St. Lawrence route last year, there is every possibility that the St. Lawrence route will be abandoned.

The White Star, which is an all-British line, realizing the potentialities of the St. Lawrence route, had these two magnificent vessels constructed and placed upon that route. While they proved good earners from a passenger-carrying standpoint, the company found, on calculating the year's balance sheet, that they could not satisfactorily compete against the heavy subsidies paid to the Allan steamship line and to the C. P. R. steamers.

At the close of the St. Lawrence season the steamers were transferred to New York, and are now engaged in the Mediterranean service, and the company has now practically decided that they will be retained in New York unless some subsidy is granted.

In order to prevent this serious blow to the St. Lawrence route, an influential deputation, from Montreal, waited upon Sir Richard Cartwright and Hon. L. P. Brodeur on Saturday and urged that a subsidy be granted.

TIRE OF CHAMPAGNE

Ship's Crew Was Reduced to Drinking Nothing But Wine.

London, Jan. 11.—The sea, ever fruitful in strange adventures, has produced few incidents to compare with a recent incident of a voyage of the P. and O. liner Oceana, outward bound for Bombay.

Near Cape Finisterre the ocean fell in with a French schooner yacht, which was flying signals of distress. Communication was established, and the yacht signalled, "Short of water. Want doctor." A heavy sea was running, but after some difficulty one of the Oceana's boats was launched and put out to the distressed vessel.

It was found she was the Argus, fifteen days out from Dieppe, bound for Marseilles. For three days the crew had had no water, and been "reduced" to living on champagne and claret. Some of the crew were suffering from fever, and these were attended to by the doctor. The Oceana's boat made two trips in all to the yacht, the trips occupying over two hours, owing to the rough weather.

In exchange for water the crew of the Argus gave away a large quantity of wine to the Oceana's crew, saying they "were tired of it."

BIG GUNS FOR ISLANDS

Uncle Sam to Spend Large Sum Fortifying the Philippines.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Fortifications for the United States and insular possessions for the year 1911 will cost $1,920,000, over two and a half millions less than for 1910, if the House adopts the recommendations of the appropriation committee submitted today. The committee cut the department estimates for the coming year $1,109,324.58.

The largest single item in the appropriation is for the sea coast batteries of the Philippine Islands, where it is recommended that $800,000 be expended, during the coming year.

The total for fortifications in the Philippines and Hawaii is $2,689,300. The total for armaments and fortifications for defence in the United States is $1,920,000, the principal item in which is one of $600,000 for mountain, siege and field cannon and equipment. An appropriation of $440,000 is recommended for ammunition and sub-calibre guns for sea coast artillery practice, which is practically the amount appropriated for the present year.

NO NEWS OF SNEAD.
St. Catharines, Jan. 10.—There is still no news of Fletcher W. Snead, husband of Okey Snead, the woman found murdered in a bathtub in New York recently. Some of those who had come in contact with him express fears the man has made away with himself, as the news of his wife's death was a great blow to him. It is the general belief, however, that Snead has gone to some place where no one would know him. He also took all his clothes with him when he disappeared.

WHOLESALE LOOTING AT STURGEON FALLS FIRE

A Seventy-Five-Thousand-Dollar Damage Done by Sunday Evening Blaze.

[Special to The Advertiser.]
Sturgeon Falls, Jan. 10.—A big fire last night wiped out the Windsor Hotel, Cockburn block and postoffice, and a number of other buildings were damaged. The fire broke out at 7 o'clock Sunday evening in the upper part of the Windsor Hotel, and spread with great rapidity. Total loss aggregates $75,000, with partial insurance. The feature of the fire was the looting of salvage, which caused intense indignation. Thieves were wholesale, and made most brazenly.

THIS PLANT CURES MORPHINE HABIT

Discovery Was Made By Accident By London Doctor.

London, Jan. 10.—A London physician, in search of a cure for the morphia habit of ten years' duration by the ingestion of dried leaves of a plant named the Malva moschata, which is grown in the Malay peninsula, he claims that a wonderful cure of this habit was effected in a patient of his. The patient was a man of 30, who had reached a stage where he injected 45 grains of cocaine and some 24 to 30 grains of morphia into his system daily. He began his treatment in November, but broke down after a few days and secretly obtained a supply of morphia, which he used while taking the half-hourly injections. But on Dec. 8 the patient made up his mind to overcome the habit. The cravings for the drug returned at intervals, but always with lessened force, until a week ago the administration of the new medicine was stopped and the cure was announced to be complete. The patient now sleeps eight hours each night. Twelve cases like this have been successfully treated during the last two years.

The powers of this herb were discovered accidentally. Some Chinese coolies who were working in the forests of the Malay peninsula, on a sort of tea, in its place they used combedum sundam. In two weeks it was discovered the herb destroyed the desire for opium among some of the party who were addicted to it.

Hamilton, Jan. 10.—Fred Vaughan, 9 years of age, was abducted in broad daylight yesterday as he was returning from Sunday school. For some time he has been living with Mrs. Brock, who was constituted his legal guardian in view of the fact that his father and mother had separated. Yesterday, however, his mother and grandmother, who were returning from Sunday school, and bundled him into a cab, driving off with him. He has not been seen since, and the police are investigating.

GOVT. ASKED TO AID WHITE STAR LINE

Subsidy Necessary to Keep Megantic and Laurentic on St. Lawrence Route.

[Special to The Advertiser.]
Ottawa, Jan. 10.—The Government has been asked to grant aid by way of subsidy to the Megantic and Laurentic, of the White Star Steamship Company, for running to the St. Lawrence during the summer. Last summer these big boats were used as an experiment, and as it is claimed that they proved unsuccessful, the company proposed to keep them on the New York route next summer. But there is pressure to have them retained on the St. Lawrence. Saturday a deputation, of which Messrs. Robert Bickerville, M. P., Moulson, Macpherson, of Quebec, W. I. Hear, of the Robert Bickerville Company, Montreal, and James Thom, of the White Star Line, waited on Sir Richard Cartwright, minister of trade and commerce, and Hon. L. P. Brodeur, and urged that the Dominion government give a subsidy to retain these two boats. It was promised to bring the matter before a cabinet meeting at an early date.

PROBING MOORE'S DEATH.

Chicago, Jan. 10.—An inquest began today into the death of Nathan Moore, son of James Robert Moore, leader of the Rock Island group of financiers.

Moore was found dead in a room in a southside hotel under somewhat mysterious circumstances. He is said to have died yesterday afternoon, and it was not until early this morning that the police gave out the news. According to the police Moore entered the house from a back door at 4 o'clock on Sunday morning.

There are many circumstances in connection with the case that require explanation, said Coroner Hoffman today. "Apparently Mr. Moore died of heart disease, but I will not be satisfied until my doctors have made a post-mortem examination."

Sickness is usually caused by the accumulation of waste matter and impurities within the body.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, enable the bowels, the kidneys, the lungs and the pores of the skin to throw off these impurities. Thus they prevent or cure disease.
