The fine schooner Annie C. Moore, which left Victoria a month ago laden with hay and provisions for Skagway will never see Victoria again, for she wat urned to the water's edge when almost within sight of her northern destination. Captain Fred Hackett, Second Mate Stafford and one of the crew named John Curren returned on the Topeka yester-day and brought the news of the mishap. It was at midnight on October 1 that Captain Hackett was awakened by a rush of smoke into his cabin. He a once jumped up and alarmed the crew. but it was seen in a few minutes that it was hopeless to try to save the vessel, as the whole interior seemed ablaze. The schooner was then some 40 miles from Skagway and a mile and a half from shore. There when he saw the dangerous condition of and the first mate remained until the boat came back for them, and the con-dition of things became decidedly serious for awhile for those two men, as it seemed every moment that the lower part of the mast would be burned through and the whole of the spars and rigging would crash down on the deck However everyone was got safely away, and as Captain Hackett said yesterday, he was a very sad man as he stood on the shore watching his vessel burn to the water's edge.
