THE DEAD PRESIDENT. Poem By Longfellow-Warm Tribute by an ex-Confederate-The Garfield Monument Fund.

(From the New York Independent.) "E venui dal martirio a questa pace."
These words the Poet heard in Paradise, Uttered by one who, bravely dying here,
In the true faith, was living in that sphere,
Where the Celestial Cross of sacrifice
Spread its protecting arms athwarth the skies;
And, set thereon, like jewels crystal clear,
The souls magnanimous, that knew not fear,
Flashed their effulgence on his dazzled eyes.

Ah, me! how dark the discipline of pain,
Were not the suffering followed by the sense
Of infinite rest and infinite release!

This isour consolation; and again
A great soul cries to us in our suspense:
"I came from martyrdom unto this peace!"

By courage, toil, talent, integrity and sobriety, he fought his way, single-handed and alone, from the hovel to the white house. By these instrumentalities he passed from the humblest to the highest station, not only in his own country, but, I submit, to the most noble, exalted and enviable position to-day held by any citizen of the world. And held by any citizen of the world. And, although he ascended from a level so low to although he ascended from a level so low to an eminence so high, it did not dazzle him nor lessen his humility. He was one of the few men of the world's great history whom prosperity humbles and adversity strengthens. I had rather possess the enotion, the culture, the oratory and the genius of Garfield than all the blood-stained laurels that ever Cæsar tore from the livid hrows of fellen kings or all the jewels. brows of fallen kings, or all the jewels that ever Hannibal stripped from the frozen fingers of his slaughtered knights. The wisdom, moderation and reform foreshadowed in his brief administration were daily widening his influence and popularity, especially with the people of the South, and we hoped that he was hastening the day when we could all feel and say we have but one sky, one flag, one union, one have but one sky, one flag, one union, on
