TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 15 1884.

The Bribery Commission.

The conservative party is making a mistake in treating the bribery commission as they are doing. They are ignoring it, questioning its jurisdiction, doubting its constitutionality. But it is there, it is making the enquiry and it is going to make a report, and depend upon it the report that William Broadbent and his colleagues put their name to will be a document of facts and findings that the public will accept. If they are against certain conservatives they will not be able to crawl out of any technical snailshells. They will have to face the fact.

A Study for the Interpreters.

We said the other day that when the democratic plank turned up in full, the tariff plank in it would prove a study for the ablest interpreters of the English language. This anticipation is more than confirmed. In the contest just now fairly begun the fight is on the tariff question mainly; that much impartial observers can now see. The way in which the present issue has been brought about has been briefly told. The republicans adopted an out-and-out red-hot protectionist tariff plank, without any disguise or apology whatever. And a further fact is that the journals supporting Blaine are hammering away at the tariff question morning, noon and night. It is being evidently their desire to make that the most prominent of all issues in the contest. That the democrats would shrink the tariff issue if they could is a fact too well-known to be seriously controverted. And yet the Globe would have the Canadian public believe that both parties are alike desirous of "dodging" the tariff issue. Our global contemporary is indeed a blind guide on the subject of the tariff question in the United States, and we would advise people here not to be guided by it.

Is Jay Gould Coming to a Crash.

Either there are people in influential circles in New York who believe that Jay Gould is hastening towards such a crash as Villard's, only far greater; or there are those with whom the wish is father to the thought. A few weeks ago Jay Gould was making a speech in the water and land, and calling for help, while Vanderhilt grunted mockingly a self-satisfied smile, as much as to say—"down and be damned," which would be "just like Roger," we should say. And now the Herald is at some pains to inform the public that Gould has certainly entered upon a steep down grade, and is on the way to inevitable smash. It will be remembered that a year or more ago Gould was struggling in his strong-room, where he showed them his many millions in securities, after which they of course told freely what they had seen. It was allowed that his credit was helped or appeared to be helped by the display, but there were still those who thought it strange that such a display should be resorted to at all. The Herald's straight-out-and-out attack on the great speculator's credit is really a remarkable sign of the times.

Methodist Policy—No. 4.

To the Editor of The World.
Sir: The senior general superintendent of the Methodist body in an address delivered before the conference recently held here said that "while the methodists were the first numerically they were not the first socially," and then proceeded to point out that the way to attain this coveted "social" position was by the higher education of the youth of the denomination. Many years ago the writer heard the gifted Dr. A. A. Phelps lecture on the condition and wrongs of Ireland, etc., etc., and although no one can question his great ability and powers of oratory it was apparent to every listener that the lecturer was embarrassed by an influence which he had been relieved of the incubus of what was termed a slavish loyalty to the despotic rules governing the church he would have been able to deliver a greater credit, and in so doing have shown the way to a better solution of the difficulty. The doctor doubtless recalls among his old time companions in arms many who made great sacrifices for the purpose of educating their children up to a higher plane than their own, and by themselves only to find that with this higher education came a distaste for methodism and methodism was, resulting in the highest of all, the young people going over to the "establishment" or elsewhere, as inclination, or circumstance directed them. Look around among the descendants of these grand men of early methodism in Canada and note how many of them have

How to Help Federal.

There is at least one way and that a legitimate one whereby the stock of the Federal bank can be helped. It is for the shareholders, either in concert or each on his own account, buying up the stock that is floating on the street. Once these floating shares are out of the way an improvement might safely be looked for.

A Blind Guide.

In a certain sense it is none of our business what kind of commercial policy our American neighbors choose to adopt. Still, we cannot be indifferent, and rightly ways believe to be in the main, the same. It is the concern of the shareholders, either in concert or each on his own account, buying up the stock that is floating on the street. Once these floating shares are out of the way an improvement might safely be looked for.

"Mamma, I can't understand why you changed your name so often."
"What do you mean, my dear?"
"Why, first your name was Ella Jones; then it was changed to Ella Smith, and now it is changed to Ella Brown."
"All true, my dear, and perfectly natural. When I was Ella Jones I married Mr. Smith, and became Mrs. Smith. When he died, I married Mr. Brown, and became Ella Brown. Now, do you understand?"
"Yes. I wonder what your name will be next."
"Mr. Brown was very silent all the evening."
