When the New York Sun published, less than a month ago an account of the wonderful fasts of atrength performed by James Wilson, the expansionist, no little sensation in athletic circles was created. Men flocked to the places where he was to be seen in throngs and went away mystified and possibly skeptical. He was exhibited subsequently in Brooklyn and Boston, where he was known as * The Evening Sun's Hercules' and where his performances were looked upon as somewing almost superhuman.

But when, a week ago, a discription of Sampaon, the strongest-muscled was.

The Evening Hon's Hercules Meets Sampson and could withstand a terrible weight. As heither Wilcon nor Simpson could break it alone, they were placed back to back and both backled tightly into it at the same time. The buckle was ont at the same time. The buckle was ont to five reach of either and they could not have unfastened the strep in a mosth. They were then told to give 'a long pull, a strong pull, aud a pull altogether,' and burst the strap or stay there until they did. This strap was fully as strong as the
