

refactors to contribute towards enabling him to send the said Poems abroad into the World. Your Ladyship has no need of being flatter'd either by the Pencil or the Pen; and the singular perfections both of your Body and Mind are in no want of being oblig'd by Painter or Dedicator; but as what you have actually done was a seasonable Instance of your Goodness and their Generosity, and intended to minister some comfort to a Family who has been hitherto too burthenfome to the Parent that supports them; so does it call for all the suitable Thanks that a grateful Heart can possibly utter; neither could he fail inserting his publick Acknowledgements for the same, not only to your self in particular, but to all those other worthy Persons, who cheerfully follow'd so good a President.

But here the Author is constrain'd, in Point of Duty, to take leave to return his sincere Thanks to Lord V-----re, under whose Conduct it is hap-
