THE WORLD'S FAIR OPENED.—On Monday morning President Cleve-land pressed the electric button which set in motion the miles of shafting, innumerable engines and mechanisms, and the labyrinth of belting and gearing which make up the machinery of the World's Fair. A national salute was fired. Although the Fair is now formally opened and is daily visited by large numbers of people, the buildings are not nearly all completed, and many of the exhibits are not in place.

PATENT MEDICINE.—The Lowell Courier gives a graphic description of the laboratory of J. C. Ayer and Co., the proprietors of Ayer's well known medicines. The preparation of the various remedies which bear the name of Ayer necessarily implies the existence of a very considerable establishment. Bays the Courier.—" Everything within its walls speaks of order, system, experience and business capacity. From the spacious office, with its ample accommodations for 60 clerks, through all the floors and departments of the laboratory, printing office and bindery, there is no suggestion of feverish rush and haste; work goes on throughout, steadily and calmly, and a great amount of it is done. As the business has grown the facilities for handling it have kept pace; and to-day the establishment stands as a model among the many enterprises of this busy city. It is a monument to well-directed energy. And it b'ds fair to grow to still greater proportions as the name and genuine worth of Ayer's medicine which it sends forth become better known and appreciated among the peoples of the earth."
