THOUGHTS BY THE SEA.

At last thy sands are at my feet, Thy breeze upon my brow, And heart and voices rise to greet The match of waves, for thou Art as a dream, fulfilled to me, After long promise, mighty Sea !

The voice is new and strange among The woulds my ears move known-The wind-swept corn, the wild bird's song.
The Churce bell's Sabbath tone—
And later, the long rush, and loud, Of a great c ty's striving crowd.

Brt here the wavy armies come To wide and sunlit cands, With wide-weed wreaths, with flashing foam With speils from far off landsAnd music from tuy own deep heart, In which no sound of earth hath'part.

Thou comest as the strong and free That ages make not old— thousand bards have sung of three-A thousand pages told Wild tales of wonder, wos, and pain— B , t none like thy tramphant stem,

They say they hast a weary mean Of sorrow, old and deep, Beneath the still victorious tone Thy sounding waters keep . And there are tacen to whom it sends Sad thoughts of perished ships and friends.

But nought of ail the heart's belief, Which changeful years bath 1. ft. No voice that wakes see wanderer's grief. For sught he lost of lest Sounds in that everlasting chime.

Thou speak'st not to the desolate Of friends that meet in twilight yet-Of sounds from cottage doors-The dreamer, by the wave, forgets. His restless hopes, his vain regrets.

Great Sea, there are that love thee well And give to sail and breeze.

The fond home thoughts that wont to dwell By hearth and garden tires.— That tells of life's green beritage

For lovely fall the earth's bright eyes, And breaks how many a morn, On hills of heath, or woods of leaves. On vales of home and corn ? But fortunes most us there—to flee Whose presence, some would seek the sea.

THRILLING NARRATIVE.

Never shall I forget one flored agony with which I trend at the coach-door, and called on the driver, in tones that rivalled the trice of the blast, whilst the dreadful conviction was burning on my brain "that the coach

Every year, about this time, somehow or other, a child, either Christian or Mahoinvariably in consequence of it. On Thursday last a Turkish woman, with two children, went to the house of a midwife. She took the child which she carried in her arms up stairs with her, leaving the boy at the door; when she returned the boy had disappeared. The woman searched in vain: the crowd got excited, and fixed on the man the wrath of the populace was changed, and surned against a shop were some Jewish workmen were employed. These were succeeded in quieting the multitude. The next day, when the Jewish workmen retuined, they were assailed by the Turkish populace again, and driven away. Thus the streets remained in this disturbed state until among the Jewish community made representations about the subject to the French and English ambassadors, who in their surn sent over their dragoman to the Porte in bances. To-day (Feb. 25) the report is that the child has been found-Constantinople correspondent of the Times.
