

Classified Advertisements.

LESS CARDS

NOWING—Scotch Splint Soft Coal, 500 delivered. The best Soft Coal for cooking stoves. JAMES BROWN, Agent, 8 Mill Street.

W. WELLS, Mason, Plasterer, Builder work in all its branches. 100 Prince Street. Telephone 301. All kinds of work promptly attended to. Telephone 11-10-11.

R. ALLEN, CARPENTER, Builder work in all its branches. 100 Prince Street. Telephone 301. All kinds of work promptly attended to. Telephone 11-10-11.

J. DUFFY, dealer in hard and soft delivery promptly in the city, 218 Street.

WILLIAMS, successor to M. A. Fyfe, dealer in Retail Wine and Scotch, 110 and 111 Prince Street. Telephone 11-10-11. Write for family list.

P. GUY CO., Artists, Engravers, 59 Water Street. St. J. B. Telephone 301. Write for family list.

5 AND BOARDING

Three rooms, furnished or unfurnished. Address Box 762, Star.

Room on car line. Terms moderate. Carmichael street, above Duke.

Room and board in private for mother and infant. Address Star Office. 14-2-11.

Two furnished rooms, 33 White street. 11-9-11.

Room light housekeeping. 31-1-11 Peter.

PURSED ROOMS for men in T. M. Building, all conveniences. May be at any time. Apply to secretary. 10-9-11.

SM FURNISHED FLAT or Suite modern conveniences. No children. References. P. O. Box 82, city.

BOARD ROOM in first class house or home, by married couple. Rate no object. If suitable, P. O. Box 82, city. 6-3-11.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Two front rooms (private) 100 Union St.

Two gentlemen wishing rooms and good table board accommodated at No. 17 Hor. street. 21-3-11 m.c.

Sometimes one publication of a "To Let" adv. is enough—sometimes it is half enough. Again it might need even more persistence—but, the important fact is that it WILL find the tenant.

No to use the classified ads. is to remain "old-fashioned" in a "new-fashioned" town.

1 Cent a Word, 6 insertions for the price of 4

You Should Advertise.

If you want a band, don't get a poor one. And your money is sure to help you to secure one. Whose efforts you won't have to fear. Don't worry, for it can be had. And all that you need for your backing is just a clever, catchy ad.

Here is a way for you to earn plenty of side money during your spare moments at home.

Every day hundreds of people advertise in the Want Columns of the Sun and Star. They need some one to do a little extra work for them. For instance—such work as addressing envelopes, writing short stories, knitting or sewing.

These people will pay you well for your services. Why not take this opportunity of making extra money during your spare moments? It certainly will come in handy. Don't miss these valuable opportunities. Start reading Sun and Star Want Ads to-day.

SITUATIONS VACANT—FEMALE

WANTED—Young Girl to assist with housework; no washing. Apply 202 St. James street. 15-9-11.

WANTED—A kitchen girl. Apply at GRAND UNION HOTEL. 15-9-11.

A YOUNG girl for light housekeeping. Apply 203 Main street. 15-9-11.

WANTED—A young girl as waitress at 45 Elliott Row. 14-9-11.

WANTED—Girl for general housework. For experienced girl 15 months. Apply to MRS. HANSON, 273 Main street. 14-9-11.

WANTED—Girl for general housework, small family. Apply 65 Elliott Row. 15-9-11.

WANTED—A cook. Apply to MRS. FREDERICK A. PETERS, 200 Gorman street. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Tailor machinist, must be first class. DUNLOP COOK CO., LTD., 44 King Street. 11-9-11.

WANTED—A good girl for general housework. No washing. Apply O. H. Waterbury, 220 King street. East. 14-9-11.

WANTED—Girls, Vinegar and pickle factory, foot Portland St. 11-9-11.

WANTED—A good plain cook at 27 Dorchester street. 10-9-11.

WANTED—Middle aged or elderly woman for general housework. Apply with references. Mrs. F. A. Alingworth, 408 Main St. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Girl for general housework. References required. 21 Charlotte street, opposite Queen Square. 10-9-11.

WANTED—A girl for general housework. Apply 169 Charlotte St. 15-9-11.

WANTED—An experienced housemaid, best of wages; also one kitchen girl. Apply at once, 38 Coburg street. 8-9-11.

WANTED—A capable general girl. Apply Mrs. F. W. Rosch, 155 Lennox street. 6-9-11.

WANTED—A good girl for general housework. No washing. Apply at Waterbury & Rising's office, 41 King street. 14-9-11.

WANTED—Cook, references required. Apply MRS. BARNABY, 201 Princess St. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Capable girl for general housework. Apply 211 Gorman St. 15-9-11.

WANTED—A nurse girl. Apply to Mrs. Carter, 655 Main St. 21-9-11.

GIRLS WANTED—Apply to "The 10, P. P. P. Paper Box Co., Canada, our street.

WANTED—A young lady for a dental office. Apply Box 747, Star office. 14-9-11.

WANTED—Girl or woman for general housework. Apply at Sun office. 21-9-11.

WANTED—A general girl, 160 Princess street. 21-9-11.

TO LET

TO LET—At Quispamsis farm with buildings thereon, consisting of house, barn, two large hen houses. Good chance for poultry man. H. C. KEANS, 55 Haven street. 14-9-11.

TO LET—Self contained house, corner Duke and Wentworth streets. Possession at once. Apply KEANS BROS., corner Union and Sydney streets. 14-9-11.

TO LET—Flat and barn, Waterloo street. Apply MITCHELL, the Store Man, 24 Union street, opposite Opera House. 14-9-11.

TO LET—One or two rooms suitable for light housekeeping, 43 Garden street. 14-9-11.

TO LET—Flat at 153 Waterloo street, containing ten rooms and bath. Possession immediately. Enquire of C. H. FERGUSON, 120 Prince William street. 15-9-11.

TO LET—Carlton, Self contained house, nine rooms, splendid location. Bath room, set tubs, etc. Also flat corner Gorman and Ludlow Sts. Apply Capt. Mackellar, Summer and Sea Sts. 11-9-11.

TO LET—From first of October, upper flat, 71 Celebration street, containing eight rooms. Apply MRS. HAWKINS, 82 Wall street. 15-9-11.

TO LET—Small four roomed flat and cold water, electric lights, 73 Exmouth street. Can be seen any day. Apply 41 Garden street. 8-9-11.

FLAT TO LET—October 1st, 3 rooms and bath room, 45 Exmouth street. Apply Arnold's Department Store. 14-9-11.

TO LET—The rooms lately occupied by Dr. Dickie, 56 King St. Apply to Dr. E. M. Wilson, 57 Charlotte street. 6-9-11.

TO LET—The Guarantee Dental Parlors, 48 King St. Apply to Dr. E. M. Wilson, 57 Charlotte street. 6-9-11.

TO LET—Flat 114 Douglas Avenue. 20-9-11.

CHATHAM, N. B., Sept. 13—Rev. A. J. Wm. Myers, who for some years has been pastor of the Black River Presbyterian Church, has announced his resignation on Sunday and will take post graduate course in theology. Mr. Myers will be greatly missed by his congregation which only a few days ago celebrated burning of mortgage on their new church. The mortgage was $3000 in amount, and was cleared off in three years.

FOR SALE—A good delivery horse and express wagon. Apply T. J. PHILLIPS, 13 Dock street. 13-9-11.

FOR SALE—Don't forget that old Mid-summer clearance sale is still on. This sale affords an opportunity to pick up some fine bargains in Pianos and Organs. THE W. H. JOHNSON CO., LTD., 7 Market Square, St. John, N. B. Also Halifax, Sydney and New Glasgow.

FOR SALE—Ladies' and gents' bicycle, almost new. Cheap for cash. Apply Box 729, Star office. 15-9-11.

Class and Putty, Mixed Paints, Varnish, Shellac, Oil, Plaster Paris, Cement, Whiting, Brushes of all kinds, Lamp Goods, Half Sole and Heels, Rubber Heels, Shoe Findings. DUNAL'S, 17 Waterloo Street.

Carriage for Sale. A nice driving Carriage for sale. Apply to The W. H. Johnson Co., Ltd.

WANTED. A RELIABLE BUSINESS MAN. First class accountant and financier is open for position as Secy-Treas in new or old going concern. Could assist in incorporating new business. Must have good salary so no room in business or would take the same in stock. Address Box 757, Star office. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Four rooms, central. Address, stating terms, Box 758, Star office. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Choir of prominent City Church has vacancies for Singers (all parts). Good opportunity for experience in best church music. Readers preferred. Address, CHORISTER, care of Star Office. 15-9-11.

WANTED—Young lady wishes position as book-keeper, single or double entry, to work in the afternoon. Address Box 758 Star office. 6-9-11.

VETERAN'S SCRIP WANTED. I will pay $500 cash for South African scrip for immediate delivery. Write Box 76, Star Office.

WANTED TO PURCHASE—Gentlemen's cast off clothing, footwear, fur coats, ladies' furs, jewelry, diamonds, musical instruments, guns, revolvers, tools, skates, etc. Call or send postal. H. GILBERT, 24 Mill St.

MISCELLANEOUS. AGENTS MADE BIG MONEY selling "VOL-PEEK" Granite Cement. Mends holes in pots and pans. Everybody buys. Agents make over 100 p.c. profits. F. NAGLE, Westmount, Que. 6-9-11 w & s.

The attention of our readers is drawn to the Canadian Pacific advertisement in this issue, which announces special colonist rates to British Columbia and Pacific coast points. The Canadian Pacific is the shortest route and makes the quickest time to such points as Vancouver, Victoria, B. C., Portland, Ore., Seattle, Wash., Nelson, Trail, Rossland, B. C., etc. etc. Persons travelling via the C. P. R. are given a through service, and changes, transfers, and misconnections en route are thereby avoided.

THE LAUGHTER OF LIFE

A NOVEL AND A VERY INTERESTING ONE. Copyright 1908 By MARIA ALBANESI

(Continued.)

"You see, my dear," she said, "I know a little bit about these sort of things. As a matter of fact, I heard that he was paying particular attention to Drusilla at Drake; that was one reason why I came here today. Of course, it is a very important matter, and I thought you might like to talk it over with me. The position is excellent; at the same time one has to be careful."

"Yes," said Bertha, with a catch in her voice, and a significant half-glance across the room.

It troubled her that such a delicate subject should be discussed by her aunt, and more particularly at this moment.

"It is, of course," well known that Drusilla is a very rich girl. Mrs. Lingfield, quite impervious to the hint conveyed in Bertha's manner, "I mean that people regard Drusilla as a great catch. And though I have never really understood how much exactly poor Bertha is, she is naturally what might be called a very rich girl."

Bertha Heronworth rose with a quick step. She pushed back her chair and walked in her halting fashion across the room towards those two at the piano. Her gown in the evening was usually black; tonight she wore velvet with a beautiful wide collar of old lace, and as Carlingford glanced up at her, and saw her coming, he said to her sister, "She is looking at her."

How charming Miss Heronworth looked! It is such a relief to see a woman dressed as she dresses. I adore the way she does her hair."

"Don't you like the way I do mine?" asked the girl in a sleepy voice.

And he answered her truthfully: "I don't know how to say his farewell. I never know what you wear. I only know that you are lovely; amazingly, maddeningly lovely."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I'm not really a motorist at all! Tearing wildly through the country doesn't give me the slightest pleasure. Indeed, to me there is a sort of arrogance, a horrible selfishness, attached to a motor-car. I want tappy till I had one, and that dear, sweet angel always gives me what I want; but now I am not at all sure that our old coachman isn't right, and that there is not more dignity and luxury and comfort in an old-fashioned horse-carriage. Everybody is in a hurry nowadays," said Drusilla. "Why do people want to be in a hurry?"

"It is because there is no music for me!" inquired Bertha, as the young man stood before her and held out his hand to say "Good-bye."

"I really think I must go now, but I will come tomorrow if you will let me."

Drusilla had moved away; she was walking across the room towards her aunt.

"I want to speak to you alone," Carlingford said to Miss Heronworth. "May I come tomorrow?"

He was looking at her intently, and it seemed to him that her small face had a curious yearning in its expression; a look strangely suggestive of pain. There was just a little pause, and then Miss Heronworth said: "You will find me here all the morning, Lord Carlingford."

He bent and kissed her hand. He said that the semblance of maturity about her came from her character, from circumstances alone, yet at this moment she stood to him in the light of Drusilla's mother.

He paused to say a few charming words to Mrs. Lingfield, but he had not expected to say his farewell of Drusilla in the presence of others. The girl, however, elected to dismiss him casually.

"Good night," she said. "I heard you making an assignment with Bertha to-morrow, but, of course, we shan't expect you. You are one of those erratic kind of people who are here today and gone the next. And she knows by the tone in her voice that she was not in her customary serene humor."

"Smile," she said to the young man, "sing all you know. Bertha will listen and I will go to sleep."

Lord Carlingford shut down the piano.

"That is a hint," he said, and he glanced at the clock. "Half-past ten. Miss Heronworth, I feel ashamed; I have already trespassed on your kindness far too much today."

"You have served a very useful purpose," said Drusilla, getting up out of the chair reluctantly. "no one goes in that mood except when I am at home, and it was getting rusty for want of use. While you are down here do please make your own arrangements with Wilkins, the chauffeur. I am afraid he has a very high opinion of himself."

Drusilla said, "I