ALLAN & MCKENZIE

An interior view of this fine establishment is presented in this book on page 116, in the full confidence that it will appeal strongly both to business sense and artistic taste. Necessarily, but an imperfect picture can be exhibited on paper as compared with the sight of the actual interior; and yet one finds in the half-tone engraving a great deal that recalls what the shopper notes on entering the store. The photograph was a snapshot for which no special preparation of the premises was made. It simply shows a reduced picture of the every day store, always heavily and variously stocked, yet never looking over crowded. The goods embrace everything in a combined hardware, stove and tinware store, or what might be more aptly described, a complete house furnishings establishment of the high-class order. The goods are, in every class, the very best quality the market affords, for the house prides itself on doing a superior trade among those classes of buyers to whom modern ideas, combined with sterling worth, are the desideratum. In high-class Cutlery, Culinary Utensils and general Table Furnishings the standard is studiously maintained; while as to the Stoves and Hardware, the Lamps and the infinite variety of Fancyware, city establishments do not surpass Allan & McKenzie's. The proprietors are thoroughly versed in every branch of their business and the general atmosphere of refinement that pervades the place is enhanced by the courteous and obliging demeanor of the whole staff.
