WHAT THE EARTH SAYS OF ITS HISTORY .-Rev. Mr. Paiseley's lecture before the Dartmouth Y. M. C. A., last evening, was very well attended, and was evidently highly appreciated to all who listened to it. The subject, involving so much of geological science, was handled with a freedom from scientific terms and technicalities that showed the lecturer conversant with his theme, and enabled the audience to understand the most important scientific truths. The gradual development of the earth from a formless molten mass to its present form and composition were comprehensively sketched, and vivid pictures, highly imaginative, but having their outlines in accordance with scientific truth, were drawn of the state and appearance of our earth at various periods in its history. Several interesting chemical experiments were exhibited to shew the exploive power of the various gases that must have been generated in the formative processes of past ages .- Chronicle 11th inst.
