Mr. Harry Lydiard left on Monday with Border to take part in the races this week at Readville, Mass.

A correspondent from Aldershot says:—"The wild rumours regarding small-pox kept the usual large crowd of visitors down to but a few, and hence the camp enjoyed a quietness seldom known here before. The small-pox scare is still the topic of the soldiers conversation, and the fact that two men of the 68th Regiment are kept in quarantine all by themselves, while it is generally understood that the whole of that regiment are to be vaccinated at once, add considerable to the talk. As a matter of fact there is little of nothing in the whole thing, and what has been and is being done is only the wise acts of those in command to prevent a possible spread. The men who were ordered from camp belonging to this regiment all deem it the biggest joke of the season, and many funny stories are told of how the men managed to cause sufficient delay to keep them in camp, while the orders were being changed."
