HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE

A dark look here crossed the Italian's face, which was not pleasant to see, "I am telling you the simple truth, Inez," he resumed. "When I found that all further pursuit was useless, I came back to Serranto. I longed to see you again. Luigi told me all about the finding of the letter, and your anger. I ing of the letter, and your anger. I did not know whether I had made up my mind to disclose my scheme to you or not. I longed to see you; your face not. I longed to see you; your face haunted me—"

"Spare me!" she cried. "You humiliate me too much when you presume to speak of what you call love."
"You did not always think so," he replied: "but you must hear the truth. I remained near Serranto until one day I found that I was lingering near a deserted ruin. It was from one of the old servants who lived with Madame Monteleone that I discovered all that had happened, and that the wife I had deserted was the daughter of a rich English lord. She gave me a marvellous description of the splendors procured for La Signorina. Your new toilets and surroundings made a great impression upon old Nita. I saw and regretted at once the blunder I had made. If I had been faithful and patient, I should have reaped a rich reward. I determined to find out your relatives, to follow you to Exceled and selem you as we wife." your relatives, to follow you England, and claim you as my wife."

An irrepressible shudder seized Inez at these words. She could not help it.

"I was many months," he continued.
"before I could discover who was this "before I could discover who was this English lord. At times I almost gave up the pursuit in despair. I found at last, by dint of patient inquiry that your father was the wealthy Lord Lynne of Lynnewolde. I was almost amused at the horrified expression on Lugi's face when I told him this, 'A nice mess you have made of love affairs," he said. 'I shall desert you. You must have been born under an unlucky star.' And I have never seen him fro mthat time. I heard he had fallen in a duel, but I cannot say if it be correct.

if it be correct.

"It was the beginning of this year before I could raise money to follow you to England. I went direct to Lynnewolde, and there I heard the story of your marriage. You were even then on your yedding tour. I need not say I took the precaution of adopting a discussion of the property of the story of your marriage. You were even then on your yedding tour. I need not say I took the precaution of adopting a discussion before I visited your home. I guise before I visited your home. I was rather overwhelmed by its splendor.

was rather overwhelmed by its splendor. I had not anticipated such magnificence. I heard of the large fortune left you by your father and I resolved to have my proper share of it. Hearing you were in London, I followed you. I had letters of introduction from several Venetian nobles, and these procured me an entree into the 'highest and best circles. I saw you at the Duchess of Ruthwell's ball, and resolved to make myself known to you. You are more beautiful a thousand times, Inez, than the simple girl I saw and learned to love at Serranto." "Have you finished?" she asked, very quietly.

"Have you finished?" she asked, very but extracted to say; but I await your pleasure."

"I have nothing to say, Count Rinaldo," she said, proudly. "If I could find words in which to express my utter contempt for your character and my loathing for yourself, I would use them. But I know of none; therefore I am silent."

"For some moments the count and the lady sat in perfect silence, both collecting their forces for the final struggle. "You must remember, my lady," said the Italian, at length, "that you are entirely in my power. One word from/fine and Lord Lynne will never see you again."

"I am half inclined to speak that he again."

"I am half inclined to speak that word myself," she replied. "I would rather be at Lord Lynne's mercy than in your power."
Looking at her proud. calm face, Count Rinaldo knew that she spoke truly. For the first time he felt that he stood in the presence of his superior, He did not wish to drive her to extremes. A sudden thought flashed through his mind.

"You forgot," she said, "that you burdened yourself as well as me with "You forgot," she said, "that you burdened yourself as well as me with yowa."

"Ah," said he, "you would imply that, being a married man, I cannot have the happiness of repeating the ceremony; but I have my serious doubts as to stands good in English law. I do not stands good in English law. I do not stands good in English law. I do not you would not care to be known to Lord Lynne as having occupied any less dignified position than that of wife."

He had stung her at last; she stood erect before him, with flaming eyes.
"If I were a man," she said, "I would slay you."
"I do not doubt it," was the reply; "but you had better coolly and calmly consider the position. I do not wish to interfere with you; what has happened will ever remain buried as regards my self. You are just as you are. I know you love your husvand. In return for my forbearance I only ask one faver; when I come to you and tell you I have found the lady I should like to make your influence."

"And what if I refuse?" she added. "In that case my course is very simple," he replied, "I shall go direct to lord Lynne and ask him for the lady your influence," who is, or ought to be, my wife. You disprace will be the greater, my lord will spurn you. If you have the lady by the self of the doubt. Think twice before you give the world such a delicious dish of scandal over the fair and dainty. Lady Lynne. Hark!" he added, anddenly; "that is my lord's woice. I will wait to see him."

I nez could not interfere to prevent him; she was obliged to stand by calmy and see her husband touch the hend of the man she loathed. Then Lord Lynne and seek her husband touch the hand of the man she loathed. Then Lord Lynne was better, and spoke so kindly and tenderly to her that Rimaldo's dark face grew even darker.

"How he loves her, that quiet, cool Englishman! Ah, my lady, you would not like to leave him," he said to him.

Then the door opened again, and Agatha entered. She looked very graceful, the fair, sweet face, wearing a delicate flush, and a drooping white plume, contrasting with the golden hair. She went up to her sister and asked anxiously, if she felt better. The count rose, and Lord Lynne, unconscious that by that very act he was commencing a tragedy, introduced him to his sister-in-law.

"This," thought Rinaldo to himself, "is the co-heirese; and a fair, dainty creature, too."

From that moment his plans were laid.

laid.

Thinking to please his wife, Lord Lynne was most cordial to her friend. He made him welcome in his generous, hospitable way; he pressed him to dine with them, but the look on my lady's face warned him it were better to decline, and not to try her too far.

Count Rinaldo, who possessed a great, almost magical power of charming when he chose, laid himself out to please Lord Lynne and Agatha; he interested and amused them; when he rose to take his leave, they begged him not to be long before he came again.

"We are going to the opera to-mor."

"We are going to the opera to mor-row evening," said Lord Lynne, "Join us there, and return with us. Lindy Lynne expects one or two friends to a Count Rinaldo promised to do

"Inex," said Agatha, "why did you never tell us that you had such a nice triend as Count Montalti?"

never tell us that you had such a nice friend as Count Montalti?

"I do not consider him very nice." said her sister. "I never thought of naming him; it is so long since I have seen or heard anything of him."

"Where did you know him?" asked Philip; "he is one of the best bred men I ever remember having seen. I did not know you received such courtly visitors in your old castle of Serranto."

"Nor did we, as a rule." she replied. "His coming there was quite accidental."

"It is a wonder he did not fall in love with you, Inez." said Agatha, with a smile. "He must be invulnerable."

"He is the last person I should imagine any one could love." said Inez, hastily; then seeing something like surprise on the face of her husband and sister, she continued, carelessly: "I am prejudiced, perhaps; but a frank, noble Englishma. seems to me the only kind of the lively me face." of man to love. I am heartily tired of dark foreign faces.'

Lord Lynne laughed, and thanked her for the implied compliment. Agatha smiled, and yet thought her sister's maner strange

To her husband's distress, Lady Lynne did not recover from the little indisposition that had attacked her on the evening of the ball. She looked ill—her spirits were unequal. At times she seemed to dread going out; and again, no persuasion could induce her to remain at home. They saw her flushed as with a burning fever, and again pale and cold. "She has been out too much," he thought. "This gay, fashionable life is too great a change for her. I shall be glad when the season is over."

"I do not think I shall go to the opera tonight," said Lady Lynne to Agatha. "I am tired—you can go with Philip."

"As you like, dear," replied Agatha. "Do you think I can entertain two gentlemen? The count is to join us, you know." To her husband's distress, Lady Lynne know."

A sudden thought struck Lady Lynne, and her face grew pale.

"I had half forgotten that," she said.
"I think I will go."

Agatha wondered why her sister looked half impatient when she saw her in her white opera dress.

"What pains you have taken with your toilet to-night, Agatha!" she said. "Are you equipped for conquest?"

"No," replied the young girl, with a smile. "Conquests are not in my line."

She did look very sweet and lovely in a dress of rich white lace, without any ornaments, except a simple green wreath ornaments, except a simple green wreath in her golden hair.

"Inex," he said, "be reasonable You are happy, prosperous and beloved. If do not wish to deprive you of all that makes life dear and precious. I am contented to forego my claims if you will give me your assistance."

"In what" she asked, briefly, "In helping me to find a rich English wite."

"Do you dare to ask my aid in betraying another as I myself have been betrayed;" she said proudly.

"See, Inez," he reptied, "there is much to be said on both sides. If I meet with any one I like, and am a good and true husband, how can you call that betrayal,"

"You forgot," she said, "that you burdened yourself as well as me with yous."

conceal his great admiration of the gold-en-haired graceful girl, by whose side he lingered. He amused and interested every one—his social talents were of no mean order; and Count Rinaldo seemed in a fair way to find an easy entree in-to the highest and most exclusive circles in London. Later in the evening the con-versation turned upon the autumn and its sport.

ing remorse, the bitter shame of that miserable past—not only the hatred and loathing she felt for the count, the scorn she had for herself—but she could not miserable past—not only the hatred and loathing she felt for the count, the scorn she had for herself—but she could not endure the deception practised upon the noble, honest man who had made her his wife. There were times when she felt inclined to kneel at his feet and tell him all. She knew his notions of honor were rigid and unbending. If it broke his own heart and here, she knew that he would leave her that very hour, and never see her again. He would not reproach her—no angry word would fall from his lips—he would show neither scorn nor contempt—nay, he would pity her youth and folly—for Lord Lynne was ever gentle and tender in his treatment of women; but he would never see her again. She had sinned to win him; could she bear to lose him? She was still young—a long life lay before her; how could she bear its dreary blank without him? No; at any cost she must keep her seen; even though the anguish of bearing it consumed her strength and her life. From that sad, tortured breast there rose night and day that one wailing cry, "My sin has found me out." Outwardly there was no sign of anything wrong. No one could have dreamed there was a skeleton in the closet of that beautiful. Brilliant Lady Lynne. She was still the reigning belle, the leading star of fashion; the wealthy, the noble, the great—all laid their homage at her feet. Invitations poured in upon her. Day by day she became more popular and admired. Little thought those who looked with wonder and envy upon her beauty and her wealth, that this magnificent lady would gladly have changed places with the poorest and meanest to have enjoyed that greatest of all blessings—the charm of a good and peaceful conscience—a blessing that was never again to fall to the lot of Inez Lynne.
