Unfermented Wine.

The following article from the Montreal Witness will prove interesting to many of our readers:—

We have received from Mr. Raper pamphlets on the use of unfermented wine at the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, recommending strongly the wine make by a chemist named Frank Wright, 68 Kensington High street, London. The object of the promoters of this article, and we presume of Mr. Wright himself, is not the development of a personal business, but the removal of an evil which at times is a very serious one in connection with the most sacred religious service. There has been case after case of reformed drunkards having the taste for strong drink rekindled at the Lord's table, and many true Christians are kept away from this ordinance either by fear of such a consequence or by conscientious scruples as to the substance in which the Lord's death is commemorated. Many efforts to provide an article which would not only satisfy the conscience but the palate having been made in vain, the wine of Mr. Frank Wright is being by temperance men urged on the attention of Christians throughout Britain as fulfilling the later all-important requirement. The strength of custom is so great that in England most people's consciences are positively shocked by the mere proposal to substitute unintoxicating wine for the ordinary wines of commerce, as though some revered article of the faith was being assailed, and this prejudice was greatly strengthened by the unfeigned disgust with which the earlier substitutes were received. It was in vain to urge that what was used was often not wine at all. Habit with ninety-nine per cent of men and women is stronger than reason. It was necessary to get something that was to the taste real wine. While enormous public meetings are being held over this question in England, Scotland and Ireland, and grave church courts are shaken with discussions of it, it has attracted very little attention on this side of the Atlantic. In one congregation in this city, where the matter was under discussion some years ago, the communion wine in use was submitted to an analytical chemist, himself far from being prejudiced against the use of alcoholic wine. The ingredients were found to be largely chemicals and dye stuffs, a note being appended that there might be enough of the juice of the grape in it to satisfy the conscience of the maker. Another church in this city which has probably not a member in it who is not an abstainer, still uses ordinary grocery wine. It once made an effort to use something more in accordance with the principles of Christianity, but one member declared he was not going to use raisin syrup, and there the effort ended. We presume there is no need on this continent to argue the point that fermentation is not an essential condition of the fruit of the vine, but the above facts show the necessity of the provision made by Mr. Frank Wright and those who in the United States have given attention to the same matter. It is desirable that such harmless wines should be brought within the knowledge and reach of all our Churches.

An unregenerate youth—The new governess (impressively)—Oh, Tommy, when I was a little girl and made a blot on my copy book I used to cry. Tommy—(earnestly)—What! really? New governess (still more earnestly)—Yes; really cry. Tommy (still more earnestly)—What an awful little duffer you must have been—Punch.
