

How Barry Beat Arnst.

WAS TERRIFIC RACE.

There were tears—tears of joy—in Barry's eyes at the end of the great race for the sculling championship of the world, stakes of £1,000, and the Sporting Life Cup, says London Sporting Life.

For an hour afterwards Barry's ears rang with the cheers of the thousands. Arnst had also a cordial reception from the crowd.

Arnst, in sportsmanlike fashion, acknowledged that the better man won. Arnst started favorite at 6 to 4 on.

AMBITION REALIZED.

There was a dramatic moment when the race was over, and Barry had passed the winning post. As soon as he had cleared the goal he released his grip of the sculls and bowed his head, which he covered with his hands. When he raised it again his eyes were wet. Emotion had overcome him. He had realized the greatest ambition of his life, and the reaction from the strain of many weeks of hard preparation and constant anxiety had found its relief in tears.

When he awakened to his surroundings he found himself the centre of a cheering throng, whose shouts were intermingled with the noises of the siren's blasts.

Rarely, if ever, have two scullers remained so close to one another for such a long distance.

WAS HARD RACE.

For three miles out of the four and a quarter the positions of the men were constantly changing. Not until they had been sculling for nearly 10 minutes could one predict with any degree of confidence who would win. After they had travelled through mountains of water along the Chiswick Reach, there was a great race for the only sheltered spot before reaching Barnes Bridge. Barry was there first and thus paved the way to his ultimate victory.

THE START.

They started by mutual consent and got splendidly away at the first attempt. Barry appeared to lead slightly at the start, pulling 10, 18 and 32 strokes in the first quarter, half and full minute, compared with 9½, 17 and 31 by his rival.

Arnst, exerting his tremendous strength behind every stroke, gradually went up and was leading at the London R. C. boatclub. He was 10 lengths ahead at the steps on the Middlesex shore opposite the Thames I. C., and had drawn clear at Crave Steps, which he reached after sculling for 2 min. 47 secs. He was then pulling 24 strokes to the minute. Barry was well served by the tide from the Fulham Footfall ground to the Mile Post, and he was sculling with his customary ease, his long stroke keeping his craft well on the move.

TWO SECONDS DIFFERENCE.

Arnst, was going along apparently very comfortably, but could not claim a great advantage at the mile post. Only two seconds separated them at this point. Arnst passed in 4 min 58 sec., and Barry in 5 min.

Near Harrod's wharf, Arnst was sculling at the rate of 24 per minute and Barry 25. When rounding the corner for Hammersmith Bridge Barry had to pull his right scull to keep clear of his opponent, but he never allowed Arnst to get far away.

As a matter of fact he was gradually overhauling him at Hammersmith. Arnst went under the centre archway in 5 min. 30 sec. and Barry was only a second behind him.

BARRY IN FRONT.

For the first time since the start part of the race he got his boat ahead when opposite the headquarters of the West End A. R. A.

Here the men encountered their roughest water of the whole journey. It was a veritable sea, and both boats must have "shipped" a good deal of water. Arnst probably derived slight advantage from the inside berth round the bend. Barry attempted to seek shelter as much as possible, but Arnst kept him well out. Both men literally crawled through the waves.

Barry retained his lead for a short distance, then Arnst drew level, but Barry was again a few feet in front.

At the bottom of Chiswick Eyot, Arnst slightly quickened, and the rivals sculled side by side, practically the full length of the island. Barry probably had a short lead at the top, but Arnst had regained his position at Chiswick Steps. His time at this landmark was 14 min. 3 sec., and Barry 14 min. 5 sec.

SMOOTH WATER.

Both men were racing as hard as they could, and Barry had drawn almost level at Thornycroft's. A few yards ahead was a stretch of smooth water. Whoever reached that first was practically certain to win. Unless Arnst could command, a well sustained spurt the outlook favoured Barry, for he was better served by the station.

A BIG EFFORT.

The Englishman rose to the occasion in praiseworthy style. He secured the lead at the Brewery and was 10 lengths ahead at Duke's Meadows. Then it was that he derived the benefit from the shelter which the Middlesex banks afforded. As soon as he was out of the troubled waters Barry went away with surprising ease and without any apparent exertion.

Arnst too, sought protection at this spot, but Barry was too far away. He kept inshore for the remainder of the course, passing under Barnes Bridge after sculling for 19 min. 32 sec. Arnst being 13 sec. later. Barry kept his beautiful style and long-swinging strokes, and had an opportunity for a breather. He was prepared for an emergency.

LAST ATTEMPT.

It was just as well he was, for Arnst made an almost superhuman effort near Mordlake Brewery. Barry helps knew that Barry was in slack water on the Middlesex side, and advised Arnst to quicken for a few strokes. It was a magnificent and plucky spurt on the part of the New Zealander, and he went up fast, but could not sustain the pressure. He topped completely exhausted, opposite Mortlake Brewery.

Barry continued at an easy paddle and drifted by the winning post. The race had been in progress 20 min. 8 sec. Arnst continued after a few seconds rest, and going alongside Barry shook him fervently by the hand and congratulated him upon his fine performance.

Manners.

BY H. L. RANN.

Manners are a form of social gymnastics which people use for the purpose of convincing everybody that they are perfectly at ease. Good manners will enable a man who hasn't earned a dime in six months to enter into a brown-stone front on the boulevard and get away with a high hand-shake and a perfumed line of book review bunk, while a two-fisted son of toil who pulls down $9 a day juggling pressed brick would be thrown through the panels of an iron fence because he wore a sack suit after 6 p.m.

There has been a great change in manners since the clinging hoop skirt and the nine-inch blouse were hit between the eyes by fashion's stern decree. In the old days a man couldn't meet a woman without implanting a chaste and rosette kiss upon the back of her hand, but if any gallant of the present age should seek to revive that hallowed custom an outraged husband would splutter his physique all the way from the dining-room to the front steps.

It used to be considered a religious act to give a woman with seven bundles and a 60-pound infant in arms a seat in a street car, but there is nothing in religion or morals that justifies any such familiarity nowadays.

In some localities it is still considered good form for a man to remove his hat on entering an elevator inhabited by femininity. This humiliating practice, however, is giving way to the habit of wearing the hat at an angle of forty-five degrees and filling all the willow plumes in the car with tobacco smoke.

Some people are so afraid of wearing out their manners that they seldom bother to put them on at home, but reserve them for some social gathering where there isn't much else in the line of entertainment. A man is said to have perfect manners when he is able to pick out the salad fork without watching his neighbour out of the corner of his eye and following his lead.

Was Persistent

A leading theatrical manager told a dramatic critic stories as he strolled in the bright, cold weather down the Strand. "There was one chap," said he, "I couldn't get rid of. Dear me, he was persistent. I refused his farce seven times, and he still kept turning up with it re-written here and there. The eighth time he came to me I told him firmly it was no use. 'But, sir,' he said, 'is there no possible way you could put my farce on the stage?' 'Well,' said I, 'there's one way, but I don't know if you'd submit.' 'Oh, I'd submit!' he cried. 'I'd submit to anything!' he cried, 'we'll grind it up and use it as a snowstorm.'"
